- 4. a clause introduced with כִּי is interrupted by a clause introduced with אִם: for if we flee, they will not care 2S 18₃; הֲכִי is it that? 2S 9₁ Jb 6₂₂; a positive answer is implied Gn 27₃₆ 2S 23₁₉ (הֲנִו) for הֲכִי 1C 11₂₅; כִּי הֲלֹא is it not (a fact) that? 1S 10₁; וְכִי introducing a rhetorical question: is it that? 1S 24₂₀ Is 36₁₉; כִּי אַף → אַף כִּי only 1S 8₉.

- 11. conditional: if, in case (Akk. vSoden Gramm. §162d, on kī): כִּי אֲמַרְתִּי suppose I say, meaning if I say Jb 7₁₃ Nu 5₂₀; thus coming close to the purely conditional אִם; in the casuistic regulations of the Book of the Covenant כִּי occurs in the main sentence Ex 21₂, אִם in the secondary sentences 21₃₋₅; later on there is often no difference Nu 5_{19f} Jb 38₅ :: 4-18.

—2. origin: as well as equating the Hebrews with the Habiru of the El-Amarna letters (written ideographically as sa.gaz), in Ug. pr̄m, ḥapiru (Gordon Textbook §19:1899) and Eg. pr(w), a type of foreign labourer (Erman-G. 1:181), p must be read as b, which makes the identification questionable (Borger), though it is not of necessity excluded (Kraeling BASOR 77 (1940):32f; Weippert Landnahme (see above) 84); the Habiru appear in Babylon, Mari, Nuzi, and most recently also in Alalakh (Eissfeldt Kl. Schr. 3:273ff) as a half-settled group occupied in labour and military duties; present research recognises five interpretations of ḥab/piru

—עִבְרִי (see Weippert Landnahme 66ff; Schatz 144ff): a) עִבְרִי meaning the name of a nation (so Jirku Die Wanderungen der Hebräer im 3. und 2. vorchristlichen Jahrtausend, AO 24/2; (1924); b) עִבְרִי meaning firstly a social group, and only secondarily used to indicate the name of a nation (so Alt Kl. Schr. 1:290ff; Noth ATD 5:143f; Weippert Landnahme 68ff; Helck VT 18 (1968):472; Gunneweg Geschichte 37f); c) עִבְרִי (which has no connection with ḥab/piru) meaning a lower class Israelite in the pre-exilic community (so Lipinski VT 26 (1976):120-3); d) עִבְרִי meaning a loosely connected ethnic group which is not simply to be identified with the Israelites but to which they belonged (so Koch VT 19 (1969):37ff; de Vaux Histoire 1:106ff; Stoebe KAT 8/1:247ff); e) a meaning somewhere between a and b (d) is given by Jepsen AfO 15 (1952-53):54ff; Rowley Joseph Jos. 45ff.; cf. also Herrmann Geschichte 78⁴¹.
