Preface to Volume 1

It was both a privilege and a challenge to be asked to supervise the final preparation of this English translation of what all Biblical scholars recognize as one of the outstanding scholarly achievements of the post-war years. I have accordingly been obliged to read again the whole of the original work in detail several times, and it has been salutary to discover that so much of the text I thought I knew revealed itself in a fresh light, when subjected to the pressure of issuing a translation into English. For many years in many parts of the English speaking world the voices of those who demand a working knowledge of other modern European languages (not to speak of the Classical languages) as a prerequisite for the study of Biblical Hebrew seem to have been crying in the wilderness. The publisher's decision to present this monument of Biblical scholarship in an English version is an important attempt to answer the call of growing numbers of Bible students whose knowledge of German is not sufficient to appreciate HAL in its original form.

Everyone who has been involved in the project realised that in an ideal world we would have taken the opportunity to bring the text completely up-to-date, but we also realised that that option could well delay the appearance of even one volume until the next millennium. So, having established that there existed a need for an English translation as soon as the German edition was complete, and knowing that today's electronic printing methods make for easier publication, it seemed better to make accessible immediately a proven support for those who choose to learn Hebrew through English rather than to make them wait indefinitely for a more modern version. What is here offered is not a new lexicon, but a new presentation of one that has been evolving through more than a generation of constant use.

It was in 1953 that the first edition was published with its distinctive bilingual translations of the quoted Biblical passages. It had taken six years to print the text Koehler had prepared and the stock was exhausted almost immediately. He died in 1956, but six months before his death he had invited Baumgartner to complete a Supplement, which was issued in 1957, together with a reprint of the first edition. These two volumes comprise the second (bilingual) edition. Baumgartner was already aware of the difficulty of using the Supplement at the same time as the main volume, and he stated in his Introduction that he had it in mind to prepare a consolidated third edition. The first fascicle of that third edition appeared in 1967; but he had decided to abandon the bilingual format favoured by Koehler.

The five fascicles of the third edition will have taken over twenty-five years to emerge; the seemingly endless hours of painstaking work that have been applied to them manifest themselves in the obituaries of so many long-lived Professors of Hebrew for whom English was not a mother tongue. The last of those fascicles, comprising the Aramaic lexicon, is expected to be published soon, carefully prepared by J.J. Stamm and Benedikt Hartmann, who have enjoyed the enduring support of Philippe Reymond. It will be published simultaneously with a complete list of additions and corrections for the whole of the third German edition and with a revised list of abbreviations. I have used the list of additions, in conjunction with the ones published in the other three fascicles, as a basis for the modification of the original text for this English edition.

The revised list of abbreviations has been used as the basis for the one presented here. Because the sigla and the patterns of abbreviation changed from time to time during the production of HAL, one of my aims in the English edition has been to introduce a greater measure of consistency and clarity within the text itself. But it was impossible in the time allowed to complete this task as thoroughly as I would have liked. Abbreviations for Hebrew words and for the sigla have hardly been changed (the most noticeable will be an arrow instead of the famous digamma for cross references). Only the most common grammatical terms are abbreviated; the rest are spelled out in full; I adopted a similar approach to the names of languages and dialects. The only proper name to be abbreviated as a matter of course is the tetragrammaton. Abbreviations for the books of the Bible have been anglicised where necessary, and sometimes expanded to avoid confusion.

Bibliographical references have been extensively changed so that the surname of the author (or at least the first part of a hyphenated name and the first author of a joint work) has been printed in full. The only books now referred to without an author's name are those to which very frequent reference is made, and they are all systematically cross referenced in the new lists. Even if some inconsistencies persist, I hope the changes I have introduced mean that the obscurer abbreviations have become clearer and that the confusing ones have disappeared.

The publisher had expected that this volume would appear simultaneously with the fifth fascicle of the German edition, but in the end this proved impossible. Nevertheless the editors of that fascicle kindly agreed that an English translation of their foreword should be published here first. It was therefore particularly sad to learn early this autumn of the death of Professor Stamm, which occurred before he could see the final proof of that translation.

This first English edition will comprise five fascicles which are scheduled to be published over a period of three years. The changes introduced in the last four German fascicles will straddle the English ones and the reader must be aware of consequential variation within each English fascicle. This will be especially noticeable in the range of bibliographical references but other changes of style and approach, reflecting the changing membership of the original editorial team, become apparent when the text is studied in detail. It is clearly important to bear in mind the editorship, the contents and the date of publication of each German fascicle when new types of annotation are noticed.

Some of the differences in editorial approach were noted in the various prefaces and introductory remarks in the earlier editions. They are published here to show the English reader the gradual development of the work.

Ludwig Koehler prepared the preface to the Hebrew part of the bilingual first edition (1953), and W. Baumgartner the one for the Aramaic part; but the translations into English were not always idiomatic. Furthermore, they refer in their own style to material which has been excluded or modified in the later editions. It would have been inappropriate to prepare new translations, for that would have clouded the story of the development of the Lexicon, so changes have been made only to those phrases which most disturb the English ear or to those which may mislead. Baumgartner's own translation of the Introduction to the Supplement of the second edition has been reproduced to include the references to secondary literature (which he deliberately omitted from his own English text, revised with the assistance of David Winton Thomas, then Regius Professor of Hebrew at the University of Cambridge).

But the introductions to the third edition have never been translated and they contain important information on the new approach adopted by the new editors after the death of Koehler. The one prepared by Baumgartner in the first fascicle (1967) defines this new approach clearly, and the one prepared by Hartmann for the final fascicle (1994) describes in detail how these aims were subsequently advanced under the later editors.

The preparation of this work could not have been completed in the time available unless I had been able to take advantage of the opportunity to study so often in the Library of the Nederlands Instituut voor het Nabije Oosten in Leiden, for which I express my gratitude to the Director, F. de Roos. There I was able not only to read, but also to discuss with colleagues the problems I encountered from day to day. I am especially mindful of the fellowship shown by Professors van Donzel, Veenhof, Hoftijzer and Muraoka, who, whether because of their relative distance from the project or their greater experience in handling such intricate procedures, so often enabled me to identify the area of a wood when all I could see was a mass of apparently impenetrable trees.

Furthermore I was able to benefit from the substantial contributions of the earlier translators of this volume, G.J. Jongeling-Vos and L.J. de Regt, who had been working under the supervision of K. Jongeling of the Faculty of Arts, Leiden University. More recently Johannes Tromp, from the Faculty of Theology, has applied himself to the unenviable task of collating the “on screen” text of the English edition with the published text of the German edition, and it has been a source of pleasure that we have been able sometimes to talk about materia hebraica amidst all the jargon of computer software. The final lay-out was the responsibility of Tijn Cuypers, whose love for and expertise in Classical Philology permeated his professional experience as a typesetter. The debt I owe them for their hours of labour, when there was little (at times indeed very little) light at the end of the tunnel, is immeasurable.

But equally it would not have been possible to complete the task without the forbearance of the publisher, who unfailingly offered me encouragement in word and deed when I agreed to assume the final responsibility. That the last days of preparation should have been marked by the sudden death of F.H. Pruyt, the Managing Director of E.J. Brill has brought deep sadness to us all. He saw the project begin and it was he who supported it with his distinctive vision of life; he encouraged all of us who knew him to use the time in our hands more efficiently.

All the editorial aspects of the project have been resolutely shepherded by Hans van der Meij. Whenever the valleys seemed dark he has resolved matters with an outstanding sense of propriety. Such matters by nature are often inextricably linked with production schedules and techniques, and to have had the assurance that these were always cheerfully and carefully being handled by Pim Rietbroek has enabled me to enjoy some moments of light-hearted reflection on the tortuous pathways to achieving “camera-ready copy” .

Seldom does a book owe so much to so many who have not lived to see it completed. Those of us who are allowed to remain and see it complete would certainly have liked to see it further improved, for the sake of our predecessors as well as of the work itself. But ideals are seldom attainable.

It is therefore appropriate to recall not only the words penned by the first editor in the paragraph with which he closed his first introduction just over forty years ago (see below, p. lxii), but also others penned long ago in Qoheleth.

Preface to the Hebrew Part

by Ludwig Koehler

At first sight to write a Hebrew (and Aramaic) dictionary of the Old Testament might seem an easy task; still there are some points requiring consideration.

The first thing to do is to arrange all words alphabetically. This is not so simple as it looks because a number of them begin with a prefix. The excellent Hebrew and English Lexicon of Brown, Driver and Briggs puts those words immediately after the word (root) they are derived from. But for beginners it is not always plain to find them there. Moreover the derivation sometimes is doubtful. Therefore the order of words in the present book will be strictly alphabetical, the derivations being also given with every root.

The second thing is to enumerate the occurring forms of a word. Not all forms are named (this would be a quite superfluous burden), but only those from which the other ones can be derived with safety, and in addition those which are rare or conspicuous or “irregular”. To these often references to grammar are given.

The third thing to be expected is a list of quotations of the word concerned. As far as possible all quotations are given, but where that list would be meaningless on account of the great number of occurrences, a statement is made concerning the frequency of the word and the parts of the texts where it is to be found.

As everyone will be aware even the strictest adherence to the traditional text cannot avoid supposing that there are mistakes in it. The suggested corrections of these cases (the so-called conjectures, indicated by cj.) are listed twice: in their proper alphabetical order and with the word they replace. Thus the number of quotations of both kinds surpasses considerably those of all existing dictionaries.

The main task of any dictionary of the Old Testament is to render accurately in modern language the meaning of the Hebrew words. From the beginning the texts were continually heard and read and readers and hearers derived a particular meaning from them. Thus a tradition of understanding came into existence and was handed down from generation to generation. Soon some words and notions were not clearly understood, and in some cases (גְּבִיעַ Jr 35₅, קִבְעַת Is 51_{17,22} and the meaning of רֵאָה 1S 9₉ may be cited as examples) they have been interpreted by marginal readings. An expression might also be conceived by different readers in different ways and discussions not now preserved may have arisen. The translations into Aramaic, Greek etc. have been based upon these traditions. The Septuagint shows clearly how sometimes the Hebrew has been misunderstood.

Nevertheless tradition taken as a whole is a safe foundation valid in the main through all ages. The scientific study of the Old Testament as it grew stage by stage did not and could not content itself with that tradition. The demand for the reasons and for the correctness of the understanding of Hebrew words and phrases grew stronger and stronger and formed the basis for modern scientific lexicography. Nothing is accepted because it is tradition. Every statement demands proof. No tradition is refused because it is tradition, but no tradition is considered safe unless, as far as possible, reasons are found for it.

Two ways are open for the fulfilment of such scientific study. One way leads to the context or exegesis of the whole. A word is correctly translated if the translation makes plain sense and fits into the context.

The other way is that of linguistic reasoning. This way again has two lines. The most important part of linguistics is the comparison of languages. A number of cognate languages and their idioms may be compared with Hebrew: Arabic, Aramaic, Ethiopian, Akkadian, Ugaritic and—from a considerable distance but especially significantly for loan-words—Egyptian. One by one all these languages and idioms have become known and studied. One by one they have been used by Hebrew lexicographers. To write the story of the relations and the light they have shed would be interesting and illuminating, but is not to be attempted here. Those who study them tread on difficult ground, full of dangers and fallacies. To give a very simple instance: burro means “butter” in Italian but in Spanish it means “donkey”. Both words have nothing in common but spelling and sound, for the Italian is derived from βούτυρος “cow-cheese” and the Spanish from πυρρός, “red”. If one did not know Greek the puzzle would remain unsolved. Therefore in handling comparative linguistics the keenest prudence and caution is needed. They have not always been used sufficiently.

There is one more thing. We are still far from being able to know as well as we need to and wish to the languages named above (and others also). The treasure of Arabic words for instance—so immensely rich in number that they yield too obligingly to prove anything—has not yet been treated as it deserves. Ugaritic, although the results of studying it are astonishing considering the short time we have known anything about it, lacks (more than many will admit) perspicacity in the structure and the meaning of its words. In this regard the lexicographer’s duty is to be restrained. While Ugaritic was still unknown it was the fashion to use Akkadian as liberally as possible; no wonder, for its texts bring such a rich harvest of new knowledge. But parallels and analogies might be deceiving. Hebrew, like all languages, has a manner and life of its own, its own world of things and thoughts.

The discovery of cognate languages affected Hebrew lexicography in a double way. It has enriched the Hebrew lexicon with many supporting statements, with a heap of parallels. On the other side what we know today of the Akkadian and Ugaritic lexicon would be impossible to a great extent without Hebrew. At the same time the consequence of those discoveries has made the Hebrew dictionary a storehouse of Semitic idioms. Whatever has been found of similar roots, words and meanings in the cognate idioms has been noted in the Hebrew lexicon, without considering whether in a given case there exists a historical contact or not between the peoples of those idioms. Thus there has been laid upon the Hebrew lexicon a burden which is not only disposable but which may even mislead beginners and ordinary readers, all the more so since completeness will never be reached and the study of the different languages is on very different levels. One might consider whether the next dictionary to be compiled should not considerably shorten these statements.

Another part of linguistics which has served lexicography increasingly is semantics. Since the Old Testament in its prevalent parts contains theology, the theological meanings of Hebrew words have been carefully noted from the beginning. The rest has been treated in a rather casual way, notwithstanding the fact that theological and further-reaching religious conceptions have in many cases grown out of common conceptions. The deeper, the more spiritual, the truly theological meaning is not the base, it is the final result of a development of various shades a word might have. Proof of this might be the development of מְנַחֵם . The safe principle of modern semantics is to look first for the original meaning of a word (in many cases more concrete and restricted than the secondaries) and from this to derive the word's more abstract and even more spiritual meanings. As a rule today one endeavours to draw a genetical sequence of the meanings a word is apt to assume. That principle has, as far as possible, been followed in this dictionary. Of course it must be added that sometimes the ways in which a word has chosen to develop are entangled and full of puzzles. Every other area of our study will always be more satisfactory.

This lexicon is the result of about forty years work, done step by step, piece by piece. It is taken directly from the original texts. No statement is made which has not been carefully weighed. As far as possible all observations, remarks, assertions, and arguments of the immense host of students have been earnestly considered. The years of the two wars have made many things difficult, if not impossible. Those whose book, paper, remark or suggestion has not been mentioned would be mistaken if they think that it has not been noticed. It was never difficult to mention something. It was always a pleasure to name an author. But it was often hard work to omit. The supreme rule for any writer of a dictionary must be regard for the reader. To keep it as short as possible, as plain as feasible, and to avoid every prolixity is a duty full of pain, but never to be neglected. In the end the dictionary has to serve the study of the Holy Scripture. To keep its reader within its own contents would be no worthy aim.

I need not say that I am fully aware of the faults and failures of this book. It would have been a pleasure to be its critic rather than its author. Some critics will perhaps realise that in order to get the right point of fair criticism they ought to work out a dozen pages of a lexicon for themselves before starting to judge such an endeavour.

Finally I wish to express my thanks. With hearty thanks all of us think of Wilhelm Gesenius, the master of Hebrew lexicography, whose merits are paramount and will never be forgotten. My thanks go to generation after generation of scholars, known and unknown, upon whose contributions this dictionary rests. With fullest thanks I name my friend and colleague Walter Baumgartner, whose Aramaic part is a model of carefulness, exactness and completeness, not to be reached by myself. During the last six years he has read all proofs and never ceased to contribute suggestions, corrections and additions.

The Stiftung für wissenschaftliche Forschung der Universität Zürich has granted me a considerable amount of money for the preparation of this book. The Minister of Education of The Netherlands has, by conceding the necessary amount of paper for printing, made possible the publishing of this work. It was my friend Professor P.A.H. de Boer at Leiden who decided to take the initiative for its publication. The famous and venerable publishers E.J. Brill at Leiden, both their managers and their workers, spared no effort to get it printed.

My deepest thanks turn to Him who gave strength and health and from day to day, from year to year, gave fresh joy to work at this dictionary. May His blessing be with it and with all its readers.

from the first edition (reprinted)
Introduction to the Aramaic Part
by Walter Baumgartner

1. The practice of separating the Aramaic vocabulary of the OT from the Hebrew, which today is taken as a matter of course, has in fact come into fashion only quite recently. It was Friedrich Delitzsch who first put it forward as a requirement in the introduction of his Prolegomena (1886) and it was first introduced by Brown, Driver and Briggs in their dictionary, which began to be published in 1891. They were followed by Siegfried and Stade in 1893 and in 1895 by Buhl, when he undertook his first revision of Gesenius (that is the twelfth edition, see F Schr. Eissfeldt 47f).

Only by this separation does the peculiarity of the Aramaic vocabulary become evident. Above all, how small in extent it is—about 650 words, excluding the forty or so proper names. From the present number דִּינָיָא, דְּהוּא and תְּרַת, perhaps also שִׁפְט, should disappear; while כִּיל, מִשְׁחָה and שְׁלָח should probably be added. If we disregard Gn 31₄₇ and Jr 10₁₁, which together yield only three new words, the number is distributed among the books of Daniel (2_{4b-7, 28}) and Ezra (4₈₋₆₁₈ and 7₁₂₋₂₆). About 22% are common to both books, while 60% occur only in Daniel and 18% in Ezra. Both these literary collections originate from postexilic times and not very far apart from each other in time. The documents in Ezra, together with the text of the Chronicler which unites them, belong in the main to the fifth and fourth centuries BC. Da 2-7 attained their present form during the Maccabean period; but, so far as their material is concerned, they go back to the third century, and in part perhaps even earlier. In content and literary character, both collections are very different. In Da 2-6 we have to deal with narrative, and in ch. 7 with apocalyptic, which finds its way also into ch. 2. In Ezra we have to deal with documents, and with the historical writing of the Chronicler. There is, therefore, a marked difference in their vocabulary, which is, however, modified a little by the fact that the legends of Daniel, centered in the royal court, approximate to the documentary style in their citations of royal edicts and their enumeration of offices and titles. And last, but not least, they have in common the whole background of Israelite-Jewish religion, which gives to BArm. its close relationship to the Hebrew language. The cultic terms (v.i. para. 5), most of them borrowed from Hebrew and the hymnal passages in Da 2₂₀₋₂₃ 3₃₃ 6_{27f} 7₁₄, come especially to mind in this connection.

But even so, it is not only in its extent that BArm. falls short of the Hebrew in the OT. It contrasts strongly with it also in variety. So the lexicographer has fewer opportunities of tracing the appearance of single words in certain connections and combinations, or of following differences in their meaning. The wholly accidental circumstances of what has been preserved appear as quite different in the one case and in the other. A different task is consequently set. If the BArm. vocabulary is so much less to be explained by itself—a limitation which applies also to Hebrew—we have to make good this shortcoming by utilizing other sources.

2. In his otherwise excellent book Rosenthal has not much to say concerning the history of Biblical Aramaic lexicography (Arm. Forsch. 54f). But, as in the case of Hebrew, this history begins with Wilhelm Gesenius (see W.E. Miller, The Influence of Gesenius on Hebrew Lexicography, 1927). Even in the first edition of his Lexicon (1810-12), he recommended the taking into consideration of the Targums and the Syriac translation for a better understanding of the Chaldaean language—as BArm. was then called and continued to be called as late as the ninth edition of Gesenius, owing to an ancient misunderstanding of Da 24. In his essay on the sources of Hebrew lexicography, which was added in 1823 to the second edition of his shorter Neues Handwörterbuch (it was revised several times later until 1890) he already mentions the Samaritan, the “Zabian or Nazoraean” (i.e. Mandaean) and the Palmyrene language. He had a keen eye for foreign words, and on סַרְבֵּל, סוּמְפוּנִיָּח etc. he provides astonishingly rich material. In the later editions, however, most of it was omitted. When, in the second half of the last century, the number of Palmyrene inscriptions largely increased (in 1881 the great tariff was found) the first Nabataean inscriptions became known, and the first Aramaic docketts of cuneiform inscriptions were published (in CIS II, 1889–), there came about the great rise of BArm. studies connected with the names of T. Nöldeke, S.R. Driver (Introduction to the Literature of the OT, 1891) and A.A. Bevan (see his Commentary on Daniel, 1892). The tenth edition of Gesenius (1886), prepared by F. Mühlau and W. Volck, referred to the inscriptions of the Nabataeans, of Tema and of Egypt; it mentioned once more the “Zabian” language and, for the first time, modern Syriac. But all these materials became really important only when Buhl in the twelfth edition of 1895 separated the Hebrew from the BArm. vocabulary. The new century, since 1906, added the papyri from Elephantine, by means of which the importance of Egyptian Aramaic at once became clear. The result is found in the fifteenth and the sixteenth editions of Gesenius.

The results of the young science of Assyriology were introduced by Friedrich Delitzsch into the eighth edition of 1878, and by S. Baers in Textausgabe von Daniel-Esra-Nehemia (1882) pp. vi-xii, and in his Prolegomena (1886) 140. For the ninth edition of 1883, E. Schrader made available the manuscript of the second edition of Keilinschriften und Altes Testament, which was to appear in the same year. For the first edition prepared by himself (that was the twelfth) and for later editions Buhl had as his collaborator on the Assyriological side Heinrich Zimmern, who later on wrote the Akkadische Fremdwörter (1917). The amount of Persian words and names made the cooperation of Iranian scholars similarly indispensable. After M. Haug, who had taken the lead with his Erklärung der persischen Wörter des AT (1853) in Ewald’s Jahrbuch für Biblische Wissenschaft, we have to mention especially the contributions of C.F. Andreas to the glossary in the grammar of K. Marti (1896, second edition 1911, revised and partially shortened) and of Isidor Scheftelowitz.

Like the more recent editions of Gesenius, the lexicon of Brown, Driver and Briggs also incorporated this material as far as it was available. Brown was in charge of the Aramaic part, which seems to have been completed not much earlier than 1906, and S. A. Cook added some notes to it. Less use of it was made by Siegfried and Stade and by König. Of great importance for BArm. studies was the Syriac lexicon by C. Brockelmann (1894), for which Jensen provided the Assyriological material. Especially important was the second edition (1928) with its thorough etymological notes.

3. This survey of the development of Aramaic lexicography up to 1915 enables us to see clearly the degree to which progress in etymology and semasiology depended on the increase of comparative linguistic material. Hence our task is to carry on the dictionary in the same lines, but in accordance with present day requirements and possibilities. This means that, in addition to the results of exegetical study and textual criticism which have accrued since 1915, special consideration must be given to all the material relating to Aramaic dialects and the Semitic languages. Up to 1927 it is specified in ZAW 45:84ff; up to 1937 in Rosenthal Arm. Forsch. 24ff, 295ff; more recent references may be found in Dupont-Sommer Les Araméens (1949) 79ff. Mention can be made here only of what is especially important.

a. Of Old Aramaic texts, i.e. those which are older than the texts in “Reichsaramäisch” (v.i., para. 3b, noted here as ImpArm., Imperial Aramaic), I mention the letter from Ashur (Arm (Ass)), the inscription from Sefire-Sujin (Sef-Suj.), of Barhadad of Damascus (Barh.) and the recent one of Kilamu (= Zendj.). Together with the texts already known, Zendj. (the inscriptions of Hadad and Panammu have certain linguistic peculiarities, but are unduly detached from Aramaic by J. Friedrich), Zkr. etc., they attest a fifth of the whole BArm. vocabulary.

b. The Aramaic ideographs in Middle Persian or Pehlevi (Pehl., see Rosenthal Arm. Forsch. 72ff; Dupont-Sommer Araméens 95ff), which are a counterpart of the Sumerian ideographs in the Akkadian cuneiform script and undeniably modelled upon them, have been known for many years (see C. Autran, Mémoires de la Société de Linguistique 23 (1923-35) 184ff, and Ebeling, →Frahang). M. Haug was the first to recognise their nature, and already Nöldeke (GGA 1884, 1016) had made use of them incidentally for BArm. But one seeks for them in vain in Brockelmann's Grundriss as well in the more recent introductions to Semitic linguistics by L.H. Gray (1934), H. Fleisch (1947) and J.H. Kramers (1949). Nor was there any mention of them in the discussion which took place after 1920 about the age of the Aramaic of Daniel (contrast Driver, Baumgartner, Rowley, Charles and Montgomery with Wilson and Boufflower, see ZAW 45:81ff and Rowley Aram.) although F. Hommel had already stressed their importance for BArm. in Grundriss der Geographie und Geschichte des Alten Orients (1904) 193², 203², and Albright too had referred to them briefly in JBL 40 (1921) 107. H.H. Schaeder was the first to introduce them in 1930 successfully into the discussion.

Today about 600 such ideographs are known; only they have to be collected from isolated texts, particularly from the Frahang and Paikuli, and from the glossary in Nyberg's Handbuch (II, 296ff). About 200 BArm. words, nearly a third of the whole BArm. vocabulary, find here their counterpart, if we take into consideration their special orthography and the addition of Middle Persian terminations. Sometimes also their meaning is changed: 𐤀 (𐤀) does not mean "to drink" but "to eat", 𐤁 "to sleep" etc. But the reading and interpretation of them is often so difficult, and research into different dialects (Pahlavik and Parsik) is so complicated and ever advancing, that we cannot do here without the help of the Iranian scholars.

Also the Soghdians, a North Iranian people who lived between the Oxus and the Jaxartes, used Aramaic ideographs in their script to some small extent. Only about twenty concern BArm., and only five of these are not known from Pehlevi. Quite recently some additional ideographs have come from Dura Europos, for which I refer to Altheim-Stiehl, Asien und Rom (1952) and Das erste Auftreten der Hunnen ... (1953).

The stock of words preserved in these ideographs is in the main homogeneous, and in its essentials it goes back to the official Aramaic language introduced by Darius I in continuation of a similar institution in the late Assyrian and Babylonian kingdom. We follow J. Markwart in calling it "Reichsaramäisch" ("Imperial Aramaic"; see further Schaeder 1ff; Rosenthal Arm. Forsch. 24ff; and also O.G. von Wesendonk, Litterae Orientales 49 (1932) 1ff; I.H. Hospers, Twee Problemen betreffende het Aramese van het Boek Daniel, 1948, 9ff). Messina, who denies the existence of an official Aramaic language and restricts the use of Aramaic to commerce and the western provinces (20ff), is refuted by the Aramaic version of the Behistun inscription and similar more recent finds. In the main these ideographs date from the early Achaemenid period and are the earliest representatives of this important phase in the history of Aramaic. Yet incidentally younger phenomena are met with, for example scriptio plena and the representation of a half-vowel by y, as known from Christian Palestinian Aramaic (CPArm.), Samaritan (Sam.) and Mandaean (Mnd.); and in the ideographs from Dura even a slight East Aramaic element from the Parthian and Sassanid period is discernible (Altheim-Stiehl, 59ff, 63ff). The importance of these ideographs for BArm. may be illustrated by 𐤁𐤀, "neck" written in Pehlevi and Soghdian without 𐤀, as in CParM. and Syr., it confirms that 𐤀 has been introduced only in order to differentiate it from 𐤁.

c. Besides these ideographs, we encounter the vocabulary of ImpArm. in the Aramaic texts from Egypt (= EgArm.), most of them belonging to the fifth century. To the papyri and ostraca found in and after 1906 at Elephantine, other texts have been added. From the same place come the documents written on leather from the archives of Arsham, which were acquired by Borchardt in 1933 and afterwards came into the possession of the Bodleian Library (Driver Arm. Docs.; see also Driver ZAW 62:220ff; Kahle ThR 1949:205ff). Their publication by G.R. Driver is expected at any moment. Further, there are the papyri bought in 1893 by Wilbour and now the property of the Brooklyn Museum, which E.G. Kraeling is going to publish (Kraeling Arm. Pap.; see also Kraeling BA 15 (1952) 49ff).

And lastly, there are the ostraca found from 1907-09 by Clermont-Ganneau (see Actes du XXI^e Congrès International des Orientalistes (1948) 109ff). Dupont-Sommer is preparing an edition, having already published a few of them here and there (= Ostr.). The earliest of these texts is the lease written in 515 (Bauer-Meissner Pachtvertrag). The papyri from Saqqara published by Aimé-Giron, which are very badly preserved, are later. The papyrus found in 1942 at Saqqara is a letter of about 600 B.C. sent to the Pharaoh by the king of a Phoenician or Philistine town (= Saqq.). Of the papyri found by S. Gabra in a pot in Tuna el Gabal (West Hermopolis) in 1945, which are private letters belonging to the fifth century, we have so far little information; Murad Kamil is working on them (see Actes du XXI^e Congrès International des Orientalistes (1948) 106ff; Orient. 17 (1948) 549f; →Hermop.).

All this Egyptian Aramaic vocabulary is largely identical with the vocabulary of the ideographs, as well as with the BArm. vocabulary. About 320 words, nearly half of the BArm. stock, occur here, though not always in quite the same form (→ דְּבַרְהָ). It is indeed more than half if we add the 25 words occurring as ideographs not hitherto attested in Egypt, and so probably lacking in Egypt only by accident. And the number of attested words will presumably be greater still when the ostraca, the texts in Kraeling Arm. Pap., and the texts from Hermopolis are available in their entirety. We are eager to know the relationship to BArm. of the Aramaic endorsements on bowls and small clay tablets which belong to the time of Darius I and Xerxes I which were found in hundreds at Persepolis by E.H. Herzfeld and E. Schmidt, and which are to be published by R.A. Bowman. After all, there can be no doubt, that BArm. belongs to ImpArm. It is no mere accident that they agree in so many terms and expressions which belong to the official style: לְהוּא עַל דְּבַרְתָּ אֲמַר שְׁלָה אֲזָדָא, שְׁלַחְנָא וְהוֹדַעְנָא יְרִיעַ בְּטַל, and the like. And so even terms not yet attested there, good Aramaic words like בְּטַל, גִּזְר, הֶלֶךְ, הַדְּבַר, גִּזְבַר, אֲפַרְסִי, אֲדַרְזָדָא, אֲדַרְגָּזֹר etc. may have the same origin.

d. For our knowledge of the vocalization of that time, two texts of a somewhat later date are important: a letter from Uruk written in cuneiform (third century), and a papyrus probably not much earlier (longer, but much more difficult and only partly available so far) written in Demotic, i.e. in late Egyptian script, which proves to be a reproduction of an Aramaic original. In the former, the syllabic script includes the vowels: qu-um = קוּם. Even vowels otherwise reduced or dropped appear as full vowels: qu-da-am = קֻדָּמוּ. But here probably it does not mean more than q^udām, the reduction being customary many centuries since, and in cases like ti-ḥu-u-ut the i expresses already the half-vowel. The Demotic text goes back to an Aramaic consonantal script which uses not only ו and י for ō/ū and for ī but also ס for ā, as is known from the Aramaic inscription on the Achaemenid tomb at Naksh-i Rostam (see Herzfeld 12; Altheim-Stiehl Asien und Rom 59) and sporadically from the Pehlevi ideographs, so that we may grasp at least something of the vocalization. And in certain respects, when compared with that of BArm., it is an earlier vocalization which still expresses vowels otherwise reduced or dropped, תַּאבְאָרְאֲכַאֲכָא and the like: * מַלְכָתָא : * תְּבַרְכָךָ; similarly in Uruk ḥabarān: * חַבְרָן, gab (a)rē: גַּבְרִיא, rugazē: * רֻגְזִיא (see Gordon AfO 12:111, §35). Both texts also agree in giving to the prefix בְּ the vowel a (see Gordon UH §10.1 and Rosenthal Orient. 11:176f). On the other hand, the termination -ē occurring at Uruk (gabarē men, nīšē wives, rugazē ragings, line 20) which is characteristic of the pl. det. m. in the East is lacking here. This is hardly an accident.

e. At the lower limit of ImpArm. we have equally numerous Nabataean (Nab.; see Rosenthal Arm. Forsch. 83ff) and Palmyrene (Palm.; Rosenthal 93ff) inscriptions, the former having, in accordance with their ethnic substratum, an Arabian element, the latter an Eastern Aramaic. The Nabataean vocabulary can be easily surveyed in the glossary of J. Cantineau, Le Nabatéen (II 55ff). The inscriptions found since have not altered it much. A similar glossary for the Palmyrene vocabulary does not exist. But we have at least the inscriptions collected in CIS II/3, 1926/1947, which need only to be supplemented by the most recent publications (see Ingholt-Starky Recueil; François Cumont, Fouilles de Doura-Europos, 1926). The grammars by Cantineau (1935) and Rosenthal (1936) also help to fill the gap.

The Iraqi excavation at Hatra made in 1951 has furnished texts which are more rewarding than those found long ago by the Germans there and at Ashur (see Rosenthal Arm. Forsch. 175). Like the former, they date from Christian times, and the characteristic שְׁפִיר for שְׁנפִיר recurs here.

f. In contrast to the rather artificial ImpArm. the next stage of Aramaic is represented by real local dialects, which here survive in quite distinct religions as well as national communities, and develop into religious literary languages (see Kahle ThR 1949, 201ff). The use of them is often rendered difficult by the lack of good editions. The Jewish Aramaic dialects, including that of the Babylonian Talmud, raise difficulties, because they are distributed over two different districts which were always in contact with each other.

Concerning the problems of the Targums and of their linguistic forms, which are very different since the time of Dalman, see Rosenthal Arm. Forsch. 127 and Kahle ThR 1949, 213f. For a correct evaluation of the numerous grammatical and lexical contacts with BArm. it should be noted that the greatest and most important part of the Persian borrowings, according to the phonetic system which is presupposed, go back to Achaemenid or early Parthian times (see Telegdi JA 226:177ff).

The Samaritan language, very poorly handed down, with a strong admixture of Hebraisms, but having a real West Aramaic dialect at the back of it, furnishes the sole, but not quite certain, example of BArm. בַּנֵּס .

Christian Palestinian, which, in spite of the Syriac script, is a Palestinian dialect standing in a close relationship to the Sam., is easily accessible in Schulthess's Lexicon and Grammar. The vocalization, however, is often uncertain. It has in common with BArm. נַפַּל עַל "be incumbent upon", and it provides the real meaning of טַלַּל haf. and the one extra-biblical example of יַבַּל haf. formed as פִּי. Besides JArm. the richest material for comparison is supplied by Syriac; formerly the local dialect of Edessa, it is the best treated of all, thanks to Nöldeke's Grammar and Brockelmann's Lexicon. In the Bible manuscript discovered in the Sinai monastery (Syra vetus) remains of an earlier Western Arabian dialect are preserved (see Black Arm. Approach 216ff).

g. More fully drawn on than ever before is also Mandaean, which, in spite of its late appearance in literature, has preserved both in phonetics (→ אַרְק) and in the more frequent use of the haf. some earlier linguistic features. Occasionally it enables us to fix an original form (→ חַרְי; see further HUCA 23/II, 46ff). Of course, the lexicon planned, but not carried out, by Lidzbarski is sadly missed. Here at least the material collected by Nöldeke in his grammar, which provides quite a good survey of the vocabulary, is fully abstracted, and words from the texts published by Lady Drower are added without any attempt at completeness (→ Drower; see also HUCA 23/2, 45¹², and most recently her own list of manuscripts in JRAS 1953, 34ff).

h. In his lexicon (Lex. Syr. p. iii) Brockelmann has deemed unnecessary to take in the modern dialects, the Modern Syriac (NSyr.) of Kurdistan, Urmia and the neighbourhood of Mosul (see Maclean), and the Modern-Aramaic (NArm.) spoken in Ma'lūla (see Bergsträsser Glossar and Spitaler Grammatik). But it is not without interest that בַּף, otherwise comparatively rare, survives in both dialects, in NSyr. also מְנַת and קְטַרִי הַרְצָא, and that huwwār, postulated by him as the original form of הַוָּר (VG 1:362) occurs in NArm. In NArm. however the strong Arabic element has to be taken into account.

i. Sporadic parallels to the BArm. vocabulary, together with Hebrew words evidently mediated by Jewish merchants, are also found on Arabian soil, in the Safa, east of the Hauran (→ גֹּר, נַטַּר, רַשְׁמוּ; see Littmann Safaitic p. xxi), and even, as the material collected from Arabian grammarians by C. Rabin shows, in the dialects of the western zone of the Arabian peninsula as far as the Yemen (→ רַחַם, נַשְׁם, מְרָא, חֶסְפָּ, חֶבַל, דִּי).

k. Finally even Ugaritic, which is much more important, of course, for Hebrew, makes its contribution. In place of Hb. שׁוּ we find an amazing isû = Arm. אִית, a parallel form to BArm. אִיתִי. And the sibilants, more exactly differentiated in Ugaritic script, confirm the long-established separation of Hb. I שְׁנָה, BArm. שְׁנָה, “change”, and Hb. II שְׁנָה, BArm. I תְּנָה “repeat” .

I hope the attempt made here to demonstrate the connection between the BArm. vocabulary and the Aram. vocabulary as a whole and to interpret it therefrom will be justified by the results. Three examples may be given, which may demonstrate at the same time how the bare statements of the lexicon may be amplified. Syr. pārsānā, like Hb. פָּרְסִי, exhibits the same form of the gentilic of פָּרַס as one might also expect for BArm. But there we have instead a form with short a, on the analogy of פְּשָׁרִי according to Bauer and Leander, which also occurs as a variant reading in Hebrew. Lidzbarski and A. Fischer have inferred from Arabic that פָּחָר originally denotes the potter, and only secondarily his product and its material. This is confirmed by our more recent sources of information. The Akkadian word (of Sumerian or even pre-Sumerian origin according to von Soden) takes the form parrās (von Soden Gramm. §55, 23a) which is usual for names indicating professions (see Deimel Sumerisch-akkadisches Glossar (1934) 24 s.v. baḥar) In the Aramaic sphere the second meaning comes into use as well. In Da 2₄₁ we still have the first, unless Montgomery is right in interpreting it as clay.

West Semitic has two words for heart: libbu* לֵב, which occurs alone in Akk., Arb. and Eth., and libabu* He. לֵבָב, BArm. לֵבָב. The short form is attested from Suj. to NSyr., the longer one from Pehl. to Mnd. As in Hebrew (see Koehler KBL s.v. and F.H. von Meyenfeldt, Het Hart ... in het OT (1950)) so also in BArm. both forms are used without any perceptible difference of meaning (Da 7₄ :: 4₁₃). But in Hebrew לֵב is much more frequent, 598 times against 252 times according to Koehler. In BArm. we find the opposite is the case: 7 times לֵבָב and once only לֵב. And the same holds good for Pehl., which uses only לֵבָב, and EgArm., where in Cowley Arm. Pap. לֵבָב occurs about 20 times, לֵב once (if at all); in Driver Arm. Docs. etc. both are lacking. Later on both are attested in JArm. and Mnd., only in CPArm., Sam., Syr., NArm. and NSyr. So both forms are old, but ImpArm. (and therefore also BArm.) for some reason or other prefers לֵבָב, while לֵב continues in use longer, right up to the modern dialects.

But even without such direct connections, a thorough survey has its value, as it sharpens the eye for varieties of formation, for the tendency towards certain developments and for the distribution and tenacity of many words and forms.

4. The text as given in the Codex Leningradensis, the text of Ben Asher, which is printed in the third and later editions of the BH (see BH³ 1ff) and which is taken as a basis also in the lexicon, differs from the text of Ben Hayyim in the Editio Bombergiana (on which most recent editions of the Bible including the first editions of BH are based) more frequently in the BArm. parts than it does in the Hebrew parts. In Da 2-7 we have about 90 divergencies, twice as many as in a Hebrew piece of similar extent. Consequently many a reading, which hitherto has been taken as text, becomes for the lexicon a variant, and former variants have become text.

Sometimes this concerns cases where previously the variant had been preferred, as in the case of מִתְחַנֵּן or of עֲנִיָּן. Other readings are new, like אֲמִיאָ, also without dagesh, and עֲמִיָּק. But, of course, the real value of a reading does not depend on that. Each case has to be examined on its own merits. In general these divergencies of the manuscripts concern only the orthography, full or defective writing, alternations of א and ה with final ā or ē, the insertion or omission of maqeph and the like. But some affect the vocalization, the dagesh or the consonants, and these are more important. This variability in forms, which is much greater than in Hebrew, is most obvious in the case of קָבַל, קָדַם, קָוָו, haf. and hof. The varying writing of כְּשָׁרִי, שְׁבָכָא, שְׁנָא and שְׁטָר reflects, as in Hebrew, the beginning of the displacement of שׁ by ס. In the case of עֲתִיד, עֲצִיב, עֲמִיָּק, נְהִיר and רַחֵיק we have to do with the fluctuation of the nominal types qaṭṭil and qaṭil, which is characteristic of Aramaic (see VG 1:362f), and in the case of אַתָּה, בָּטַל, הוּוּ, נִטָּא and רַבָּה with different developments of the 3 fem. sg. pf. I have dealt with an obvious tendency of the tradition to shorten ā before a half-vowel (שְׁנִיָּה > שְׁנִיָּה) in the Fschr. Eissfeldt (p. 48f).

Special attention should be paid to the variant readings of the “Oriental” or “Babylonian” tradition, which may be found in part in the Appendix of Strack’s grammar (p. 32*ff) and since then more completely with the material supplied by Kahle in BH³. Their importance for the Hebrew text of the OT also has been stressed especially by Kahle (see Textand Mas. Ost.; see also ZAW 46 (1928) 113ff; ThR 1933:232ff; BH³ p. xff). Both for technical reasons, and because the signs are not always easy to understand, the supralinear writing is given in the lexicon in transcription. In contrast to the other variants there is often behind these a system, a continuous divergent tradition of BArm.: amar, elāh etc. instead of אָמַר, אֱלֹהִים, w before a consonant with a half-vowel as *w*¹, initial y^o as ī, another type of perfect (→ יָכַל טָאב, יָרַב, קָרַב, שָׁפַר), of imperfect (→ אָכַל), of noun (→ אָסַר, הָסַן, טָפַר), another verbal stem (→ בָּהַל, נָצַח, קָטַל), a different treatment of weak verbs (→ אַתָּה haf. hof., וְיִן hitpe., טָוַפַּף haf.), a different formation of 3 sg.f. (→ נָפַק) and the like (see Rosenthal Arm. Forsch. 49f).

Certainly these differences are not all of one kind, and some of them are unquestionably secondary. But often they stand side by side as having the same value: husnā together with הֶסְנָא ; naghā together with נָגְהָא ; yōkul together with יָאכַל . Fairly frequently the Oriental form can only be primary: guli: גֻּלִי ; hahsinū: הֶחְסִנוּ ; šabā: שָׁבַעָה ; riglayyā: רִגְלַיָּא ; etc. Also ahšdarpan stands nearer to the Persian form of the word than אַחְשָׁרוּזִי . The linguistic importance of such variants is quite obvious. They are more frequent than in Hebrew and they show that the grammatical tradition of BArm. is essentially less homogeneous. How far this juxtaposition of different forms and systems depends on differences of time and place remains an open question. In the case of maškab: מִשְׁכָּב and such like, it is a common West Semitic phenomenon (see ThZ 9:154ff), which affects also Hebrew. It is one of the merits of Bauer-Leander that they have included these variants in their grammar, so far as they were known to them. And since the lexicon supplies material for grammatical research, they are to be entered with great care here too. This is, in my opinion, the second main requirement at the present time. The first was referred to in §3.

5. The number of foreign and loan-words in BArm. is somewhat higher than in Hebrew. If Hebrew and Canaanite words are excluded (they will be discussed later) they amount to about 75, i.e. 12 per cent of the whole BArm. vocabulary. The question of their origin, first raised by Gesenius, is now settled for most of them. In the first place there are more than forty words contributed by Akkadian, to which Delitzsch and Zimmern have given special attention (v.s. §2). Nöldeke had often thought of a Persian origin for them (see GGA 1884, 1022 for אֲנָרָה, זִיּוּ, נִרְבָּךְ). In the case of אֲפָתָם and זְמַן this alternative still is open. That the number mentioned is so high (for the whole of the Hebrew vocabulary we have to reckon only with about a hundred!) is in part explained by the special contents and the scene of action of our texts (v.s. §1). But in Aramaic generally we find a fairly strong Akkadian element, as Zimmern’s list (p. 79ff) shows, although it seems to go too far. Also of the Arm. words established by Fraenkel in Arabic, not a few go back to Akkadian. But of these forty words, eleven are mediated only by Akkadian, eight (for example אֲשֵׁן, אֲתוּן, אֲשֵׁן, אֲשֵׁן) come from Sumerian, אֲרִנָּן and פְּרִזָּל from Asia Minor, and כְּרַבְלָה probably from the language of the Cimmerians. Two fifths of the whole number are attested for ImpArm., one fifth in OArm. אֲנָרָה, זָכָה, כָּר, סָפַר, סָפַר, פְּחָה and others could have been mediated by the Canaanite language. In the case of זָקַר, טָעַם, לָשָׁן, פָּלַח, פָּשַׁר and צָלָה, only a certain meaning of a good Arm. word is borrowed. פָּרַס, הֶלֶךְ and תָּקַל, are partly Aramaized in form, אֲשַׁף especially in its variants. As to their contents, these words are concerned with architecture, pottery, administration, law and religion.

The foreign words of Persian origin, about 25 in number, have always raised difficulties. It is still debated whether some of them are common nouns or tribal names. On the basis of the modern science of Iranian, more markedly differentiated than previously, Benveniste, Eilers, Schaeder and Telegdi have advanced beyond the earlier attempts at explanation (v.s. §2). But some still remain doubtful. In some cases, as in that of סַרְבָּל, it may have been a foreign word in Persian. Most of these words are concerned with administration, law or religion. Half of them are attested for ImpArm.; a quarter of them do not occur elsewhere in Aramaic generally.

A foreign word from Egypt, and therefore a great rarity (even in the EgArm. texts they are very scarce, being restricted, for example, in Cowley Arm. Pap. to personal names, with a few nautical terms in no. 26), might be חַרְטָמִי, unless it has come in from the story of Joseph (see KBL, Hebrew). Of Greek loan-words there remain only the three musical instruments of Da 34; כָּרוֹז and פְּתִינָמַי no longer come into the question.

The extent to which these foreign words have become naturalized in Aramaic may be seen from the fact that not a few of them developed denominative verbs. Such are זָבַן, where the foreign word itself is preserved only in Mnd., and זָמַן in BArm. From נִוְלָו we have the denominative attested in JArm., and from אֲשַׁף and כְּרַבְּלָה we have denominatives late in the OT and in Middle Hebrew. The predominance of words of Akkadian origin shows the profound influence of Babylonian culture long after the fall of the Babylonian empire.

The question of grammatical and lexical Hebraisms has of late found different answers. Kautzsch (Gramm. §8) supposed that they were extensive; Nöldeke (GGA 1884, 1015f), and even more so Powell, restricted their number on account of the inscriptions; Blake again takes them more into account. That a better knowledge of earlier Aramaic is of great importance here is clear. In 1913 Brockelmann was still inclined to explain the interrogative הֵ in BArm. and Targum as due to Hebrew influence (VG 2:193). Four years later it came to light in the letter from Ashur. Words which occur in ImpArm. outside the Jewish sphere, especially in the ideographs, in Nab. and Palm., as * אֲחַרִי (: Montgomery 163) or אֲשַׁף, can no longer be considered as Hebraisms. Moreover, Kautzsch had already rightly distinguished between Hebraisms which already belonged to the BArm. of that time, and those which got into the text, intentionally or unintentionally, through copyists (the vocalization of אֵלָה cf. יִכָּל, cf. בֵּיתִי, יָכַל and the termination -im). Bauer and Leander, on the other hand, separated off from those genuine Hebraisms still another group, “Canaanisms”, which came into Aramaic, and consequently also into BArm., either from the Canaanite stratum, or as a result of Canaanite influence on the developments of an Aramaic literary language (see BL §1s-w; OLZ 29, 801f; Lidzbarski Urk. 11). In practice, of course, the distinction is not so easily drawn. To the group of real Hebraisms we may assign Hebrew theological and cultic terms (BL 10u) as חֲטָא, חֲנֻכָּה, גִּלְוִי and its derivatives, מִחֻלָּקָה, נִיחֻחַ, מִנְחָה, מְלִיּוֹן, עֲלִיּוֹן, and עֲלוּהָ, already Aramaized in part, all of them words which mostly do not occur outside the Biblical sphere. The few exceptions from Elephantine are easily intelligible. מִאֲזֵנָא and צִנְאָר seem to have got at least their א from Hebrew. For the third group there remain some words, mostly professional and administrative technical terms, as אֵל (? → עֵל), לְאִמֹר, דְּבָרָה, לְאִמֹר, זָכָה (v.s.) לְבוּשׁ, עֲלִי, לְבוּשׁ, which are attested partly for ImpArm. or even earlier, or partly proved to be not Arm. on the ground of phonetics, or because of their scarce occurrence in Arm. as רֹוּלָהּ and שִׁפְטָא. Yet when Bauer and Leander include formations like אֲנוּשׁ, דְּכָרוֹן, גְּזָרָה, they are opposed in their view by Brockelmann, Littmann, Rosenthal and others. Also in the case of words like קִצְפָּה, קִצְפָּה, קִצְפָּה etc., the possibility of a common West Semitic stock has to be reckoned with. The number of each of these groups amounts to between fifteen and twenty words. At any rate, here too more different decisions are called for than previously.

6. So the main result is that BArm. belongs to ImpArm., yet with a strong Hebrew element, due to the Jewish people and its religion. And this gives to BArm. as a whole, as far as it has come down to us, a certain religious and even theological colouring. ImpArm. itself could be thought to be quite secular. Only that Pehlevi ideograph עֲדָן אַחֲרִית (→ אַחֲרִי) impinges on the question of an Apocalyptic outside Judaism. Of a theological recoinage of the vocabulary passed on to them, as we find it later in Mandaeen, we have no traces, except perhaps a special use of the term אֲרִי .

Geographically BArm. cannot be determined. The traditional distinction between East and West Aramaic is irrelevant to that period, and the only earlier sign of an Eastern dialect, namely -ē as termination of masc. pl. det. (Rosenthal Arm. Forsch. 173f), is lacking. Attempts to resolve the question by fixing the relationship between certain forms or words or meanings in different dialects have so far failed, since individual observations diverge too much (see Fsch. Eissfeldt 53f). In general BArm. is homogeneous. There are some differences between the language of Ezra and that of Daniel, and one is tempted to regard them as evidence of a development in the language (see Schaefer 30ff). But it appears that in the main they are rather to be regarded as mere orthographical differences within the one ImpArm. Yet even these are richly informative and point to some interval in time (so also Schaefer 48, 55).

It goes without saying that all these questions need to be pursued more thoroughly and, where possible, on the basis of additional material.

7. The arrangement of the lexicon follows that of the Hebrew part as far as possible.

The entry at the beginning of each letter contains what is relevant for the relationship of the sound and of the letter to Hebrew, Aramaic and Semitic in general.

A “root”, entered separately so as not to overload the article proper, is always given if a corresponding verb, primary or denominative exists anywhere in Semitic. If it is a verb, the headword is left without vowels; לְהוֹזִיא and לְהוֹזִיא are differentiated, even when tradition has obliterated the differentiation.

Then follows the Hebrew equivalent, whether it corresponds in form (טָב : טוֹב), or only in function (אַחַר : קָדִישׁ ; קָדֵשׁ ; אַחֲרָן).

Then come the examples from the other Aramaic dialects and, if necessary, from further afield (as אַבּ and אַבּ, II בַּר). Only if there is no Hebrew equivalent are all Semitic forms given (as חָשַׁל, גּוּ). Otherwise references to Arm., and, in some cases to further literature, provide the grammatical explanation. In special cases the original form is expressly indicated.

All the forms which occur of the word in question are entered, according to the text of BH^{3,4}. Important variant readings are added; poor ones are marked as such (עֲנִין, מַחֲא, אֲזָרָא). Methegh is inserted without regard to the actual tradition, wherever its function is to distinguish ā and o. The proclitic particles אֵ, בֵ, כֵ and לֵ are only entered when significant in form (אֵיקָר) or in meaning. The passages are given in full in almost every case. In the case of verbs, the constructions with the accusative or the corresponding לֵ are generally not noted.

Great care has been taken in giving the Aramaic dialect forms although, of course, not every form and every meaning could be entered. In order to save space exact indications of passages are omitted if an adequate glossary is available. So if nothing else is indicated the reader must consult Lidzbarski Handbuch for OArm. (Zendj., Ner., Tema) and Palm. words, Delaporte for Mesopotamian, Cantineau for Nab., Dalman for JArm., Petermann and Cowley Sam. Lit. for Sam., Schulthess Lex. for CPArm., Brockelmann Lex. Syr. for Syr.,

Bergsträsser for NArm. and Maclean for NSyr. In the case of the Pehlevi ideographs, in the first instance Frahangis cited, and Paikulietc. only if that is not sufficient. Of the different states of nouns, that which is the most significant for BArm. is chosen.

I am well aware that the lexicon in its present form goes beyond the immediate needs of the beginner. But for the latter there are the glossaries of Marti, Strack, and Bauer and Leander's Kurzgefasste BArm. Gramm. Anyone who wishes to become closely acquainted with Biblical Aramaic ought not to shrink from the trouble of making himself familiar with this lexicon. In accordance with the venerable tradition of Gesenius it has to serve also, if not primarily, the needs of colleagues, and consequently of research. The situation demands that much material should be given which may at first sight seem superfluous. There is the consequence too that very often no simple and plain answer can be given to questions of form and meaning, and that, in addition to the apparently correct answer, others worthy of mention should be included as far as possible.

Finally I have to express my warm thanks to all those who helped to make the lexicon possible. To my friend Ludwig Koehler, whose lexicon was so valuable as a model and so helpful to me, even though my task proved to be somewhat different; he has also read proofs and he is to be thanked for many corrections and improvements. To Winton Thomas who has subjected my English translation to a thorough examination and who has especially the merit of the present form of this introduction. To G.R. Driver, who put at my disposal the proofs of Arm. Docs., and to E.G. Kraeling for valuable communications from his Arm. Pap. And to many others for information and advice on various matters, especially to P. de Menasce, P. Kahle, E. Littmann, G. Widengren and to my former pupil Dr. R. Mach. Thanks are due also to the publisher, who, like Ludwig Koehler, allowed more room for the BArm. part, and, at my request, substituted the more convenient Jacobite type for the Estrangela.

In the English version of this introduction examples and references are shortened or altogether omitted; so anyone interested in detail must compare the German text. (note: This reprinted version of Baumgartner's original English text now incorporates the references and examples from his original German Text.) The reader is asked to forgive minor inconsistencies, especially in the use of the abbreviations.

Basel, October 1953

from the second edition

by Walter Baumgartner

The first edition of the Lexicon, which was published towards the end of 1953, sold so rapidly that it soon became evident that a second edition would be required in the near future. The time available was, however, too short to permit a complete rewriting and reprinting of it; the printing of the first edition had dragged on for six years. The only possibility at the time, therefore, was to reproduce the text unaltered, and to add necessary corrections and additions, together with a German-Hebrew and German-Aramaic glossary as an appendix. This Supplement would also be procurable separately, so that anyone who possessed the first edition and the Supplement as well, would have available all that is provided in the second edition. The inconvenience of looking up two or three different references has, however, to be reckoned with. It will be the business of a third edition to produce once more a single text.

In the meantime the health of Ludwig Koehler grew progressively worse and he died on 25th. November 1956. The German glossary is his last major work. It was very close to his heart, for in it was condensed all the research into Hebrew words on which he had been engaged for more than forty years. It was also a bridge, as it were, to a history of Hebrew culture, which he had long planned and projected, but of which only the smallest part has been published. The list of botanical and zoological words (p. 119f), as well as of words obtained from proper names (p. 121), may be especially welcome as something new. In the course of collecting and assembling the corrections and editions, for which I had put at his disposal a considerable amount of material, his strength began to fail. In May 1956 he assigned to me the completion of the second edition.

An examination of the whole text of the Lexicon was impossible in the time. But in agreement with the publishers I expanded his manuscript and it was concluded in the autumn. It is no longer possible, nor is it necessary, to specify what originated with him and what with me. It is enough that the attentive reader will discover a number of improvements. Errors and omissions which were noted only at the very last moment had to be put right in the Additamenta novissima. Also for the Aramaic part much new material had to be put in. In the reading of the proofs (from November 1956 to March 1957) I have enjoyed the intelligent assistance of Dr. Benedikt Hartmann, Lector in Hebrew at our University.

The exact relationship to the first edition may be said to be as follows. The account of Middle Hebrew and Jewish Aramaic equivalents, hitherto rather neglected, is completed. The more significant variants of the "Oriental" or "Babylonian" tradition are added. Ugaritic and other inscriptional material has been brought up to date. The vocabulary of the Dead Sea Scrolls also had to be taken into consideration, so far as it is available and so far as time allowed for acquainting oneself with it. It is cited if a word differs in form or meaning from the Old Testament, if it is attested there only rarely, if it does not occur in Middle Hebrew, or if it plays a certain role in the Qumran texts. Finally, the tables of alphabets, which were lacking in the first edition, have been added; recent literature has been cited, so far as possible, and the list of abbreviations has been extended to correspond with the additions.

The reader is asked to excuse certain inconsistencies in the abbreviations, and elsewhere, which result from the peculiar circumstances in which the new edition originated.

To the many who, by sending in corrections and desiderata, have contributed to this second edition, I cannot here express my thanks in detail. Miss Ursula Schweitzer has advised me on Egyptological questions, Wolfram von Soden on Assyriological matters, and Pierre de Menasce on everything concerning the Pehlevi ideographs. Winton Thomas supplied me with a list of misprints in the Ethiopic words, and once more assisted me with my English translation. I feel also greatly indebted to Paul Humbert for his detailed review of the Lexicon in the Theologische Zeitschrift V-VII, and to Wolf Leslau, whose manuscript of Ethiopic and South Arabic Contributions to the Hebrew Lexicon was kindly placed at my disposal at the very last moment.

Basel, March 1957

from the third edition (first fascicle)

by Walter Baumgartner

In memory of my teachers

Jakob Hausheer (1865-1943) and

Hermann Gunkel (1862-1932)

This third edition of our Lexicon is a revision of the one first published in 1953. The text has been thoroughly reworked to incorporate the appendices and errata from the Supplement (1958) to the Second Edition. Even though it was possible to preserve the content and the wording of the first edition, a few alterations were necessary and everything had to be updated. As a result the entire text has had to be rewritten and reset.

1. While the essential format of the original has been preserved some changes in style have been introduced. The only foreign type-faces now to be used are Greek and Hebrew; Arabic, Syriac, Ethiopic and Coptic appear in transcription, as does Mandaic, wherever suitable Hebrew letters (as in Lidzbarski) cannot be used. With the English translations omitted and more efficient use of type-faces, this new edition is able to offer much more information within the same compass. The use of bold type for verbal stems and the restructuring of some entries with more frequent subdivisions make it clearer and more readable. There has been an increase in the number of cross-references to grammatical sources. A “root” is specified when a corresponding Semitic verb (whether primary or denominative) can be identified and it is indicated separately so as to clear the headword entry. Concerning Hebrew orthography, the Codex Leningradensis (→Würthwein 31f) is taken as the standard, including the use of the holem point when it coincides with the diacritic point of װ in words like שָׁנָא, מוֹשֶׁה .

2. The main aim has been to maintain the high philological and exegetical standard of the Lexicon. Older material has been supplemented especially to take into account newer material which has appeared over the years. The textual base for OT vocabulary has been extended by including variant readings from the Oriental and Samaritan textual traditions as well as the Sirach fragments and the Biblical texts from Qumran. It has sometimes been clarified by reference to the vocabulary and word-usage of later sources: Sirach, the extra-Biblical Qumran texts, and the Middle Hebrew-Judaeo-Aramaic literature. By increasing the comparative material from other Semitic languages like Middle Hebrew, Judaeo-Aramaic and Samaritan, as well as South Arabian and Ethiopic, we gain a greater understanding of the etymologies and of the semantic fields of Hebrew words.

a. “Oriental” or “Babylonian” textual variants have had to be added and are indicated by the siglum Or., as אֲנֹשׁ for אֲנֹשׁ, →Kahle, Der masoretische Text des AT nach der Überlieferung der babylonischen Juden (1902) and also the manuscripts collected under the siglum E in *Biblia Hebraica*³⁻⁷.

b. Wider reference has been made to the Hebrew text of Sirach, a linguistic bridge between the Hebrew of the OT and Middle Hebrew. To the collection of texts already known there has been added one from Massada (→Sir.) which has as terminus ad quem the year 73 and can claim to be the oldest text in existence. It confirms the Hebrew version as original, corroborates most of the controversial variants of the Genizah B manuscript, but incidentally produces an interesting variant like ךֿ ךֿ ךֿ Sir 42₃ for * אֲרֵי (→ אֲרֵי qal.).

c. There is now extensive and still increasing material from Qumran and the various sites in the Judaeen desert. As well as the finds from Cave I and K.G. Kuhn’s Concordance (1960), see Discoveries in the Judaeen Desert (= DJD) I-IV and the various pieces published from Caves IV and XI (cf. C. Burchard, Bibliographie zu den Handschriften vom Toten Meer II (1965) 313ff), there are the recent discoveries from sites in Israeli territory (cf. for the moment Judean Desert Caves I, II (Jerusalem, 1960, 1961) and Kutscher on the texts from the Wadi Kheber (Lesh. 26 (1962) 117ff).

Further consideration has had to be given to the Greek and Latin transcriptions in the Septuagint, in the Secunda (→Sec.) and Jerome (see Siegfried ZAW 4 (1884) 34ff; Barr JSS 12 (1967) 1ff; in general →Sperber). There are also some more recent inscriptions which were not available to DISO and KAI and which must be mentioned: for Ramat Rachel see Aharoni, BA 24 (1961) 98ff; for Khirbet el-Lei IEJ 13 (1963) 74ff and ZAW 70:210; for Tell ‘Arad Phoenix 12 (1966) 367ff; for Qasileh →Qas.

d. Given the unsatisfactory standard of existing dictionaries when dealing with Middle Hebrew and Judaeo-Aramaic material, which is widely attested in Jewish literature but is not used nearly to the same extent, it was absolutely necessary to involve an authoritative specialist in the field; E.Y. Kutscher, Professor of Hebrew and Aramaic at the Hebrew University of Jerusalem, filled this role. In Middle Hebrew he distinguished between MHb.¹ (otherwise just MHb.) and MHb.². The former comprises the Hebrew of the Mishna (see his paper on Mischnisches Hebräisch (→Kutscher) as well as of the Tosefta and Halakhic Midrashim; MHe.² is that of both Talmuds and the Haggadic Midrashim. For Judaeo-Aramaic there are three formally and semantically distinct regional dialects: Targumic Aramaic (JArm.¹); Galilean Aramaic (JArm.²); Babylonian Aramaic (JArm.³), which belongs to the same Eastern Aramaic branch as Syriac and Mandaic. He was, in most places, able to specify whether a word was vocalized or not in the manuscripts and could make the meaning of words more precise. All this important material is reliably recorded in the OT Lexicon for the first time.

e. The special Pentateuchal tradition of the Samaritans was of little significance while A. von Gall's Ausgabe der unpunktirten Handschriften (1914/18) was the normal available source. But the situation has changed since scholars today have recorded the ceremonial recitation of texts, commonly practised still today among the Samaritan community of Nablus.

The historical-philological importance of the texts which H. Ritter and A. Schaade had dictated to them there by a priest in 1917 was recognized by P. Kahle at the time (see his Cairo Geniza (second ed. 1959) 153ff). They have been transcribed by A. Murtonen in the appendix to his book (pp. 318-335) and explained grammatically. Murtonen himself made his own recordings there in 1955/6 and published a Samaritan glossary in 1960 as the second volume for his Materials for a Non-Masoretic Hebrew Grammar. On the other hand Ben-Hayyim (of the Hebrew University, in the third volume of his book, The Literary and Oral Tradition of Hebrew and Aramaic among the Samaritans (1961), in Hebrew but with a four page English preface, →Ben Hayyim, where studies in English and French are mentioned) has, on the basis of his many years of research, given us selected extracts from Genesis to Numbers, and the whole of Deuteronomy in transcription and with explanations; on pp. 167-182 he has catalogued all the proper names found in the Pentateuch (cf. J.C. Greenfield, JBL 83 (1964) 261ff; M. Baillet, RB 67 (1960) 103ff and RB 69 (1962) 570ff. From the varied types of recitation, which differed in timing and melody and, therefore, also in vocalization, in the different religious services, he chose to base his work on the one that seemed to him to serve his purpose best.

Despite some differences in transcription between Murtonen and Ben Hayyim (as with הָשָׁם) a clear picture of the language can be drawn and its affinity with that of the Qumran texts seen. However, its relationship to the Tiberian tradition found in the Massoretic text is assessed in a variety of ways. According to Kahle (Festschr. A. Bertholet (1950) 281ff = Opera Minora II, 180ff) it mainly agrees with the pronunciation of the Jews in the early Middle Ages and represents a pronunciation which continues directly from that of the Jews of the pre-Masoretic period (which is also evident in 1QIs.^a). According to Ben Hayyim 3S VII it represents a later speech period, and according to Kutscher (Lang. Is. 126ff) it may even be regarded in some ways as an artificial construction, since it has not excluded older formations within it.

Questions arise about how far special Samaritan forms presuppose their own and possibly older basic forms. Apart from all the standard peculiarities of Samaritan (the weakening of the glottal stops, penultimate accentuation with its consequences, and vowel displacement) there still remain some cases where that seems possible (→ אַבְרָהָה , אַפְרָהָה , אַרְנֹן , גְּדִיָּה), especially in the case of the occasional correspondences with the relevant forms of Oriental tradition (→ מְדַבֵּר , Kahle Text 69f) or the Septuagint (→ גְּלָעָר). Here research is still in full swing, and as such must be brought into consideration.

Because Murtonen's Glossary is more readily available it is the one that is usually cited here, but because of certain idiosyncrasies in lay-out and terminology it is not always easy to use. Forms that are different in Ben Hayyim's work are indicated where necessary. Both transcription systems have had to be greatly simplified and adapted to the one used in this Lexicon.

f. For the Aramaic dialect spoken by Samaritans (→Sam. and Rosenthal Arm. Forsch. 133ff) there was available not only Petermann but also A. Cowley, Sam. Liturgy II, li-lxxii and Ben Hayyim's Hebrew-Arabic-Aramaic glossary הַמְלִיץ , II, 433-616.

g. Among the excellent resources that can now be added to the constantly increasing corpus of material in the field of Ugaritic are G.R. Driver's Canaanite Myths and Legends (1956), Aistleitner's Dictionary (1963, third ed. 1967) and especially the greatly expanded new edition of Gordon, Ugaritic Textbook (1965 →UT), which provides not only all the texts in transliteration and a grammar, but also the entire Ugaritic vocabulary on over 150 pages under 2762 head-words. A good third of it appears in the OT, which throws light on the $\text{שַׁפַּת כְּנַעֲנִי}$ (Is 19₁₈) and is sufficient reason to give this material serious attention. Gordon immediately saw its importance for the Hebrew Lexicon, as did M. Dahood in Ugaritic Hebrew Philology and numerous other articles in Biblica, Catholic Biblical Quarterly and other Journals. The time has long gone when it could be claimed that Ugaritic was better explained by Hebrew than Hebrew by Ugaritic. But that is not to say that all the previously suggested “Ugariticisms” are auspicious; Dahood, for one, could on occasions go too far.

And there are still enough problems to consider. The Ugaritic consonantal stock is richer than that of Hebrew (see UT §5.13) and establishing congruence is not always easy. There are so many words that can not be reliably vocalized, because the Ugaritic alphabet is purely consonantal except for the three forms of aleph. Fortunately some help is offered by those texts in Babylonian syllabic script (now fairly numerous) as well as those written in Akkadian (see PRU III, 1955) containing Ugaritic proper names or common nouns (yakunni (UT 1096 = * יִכְנִיָּהּ, יִכְן ; ya'qub-ba'al PRU III p. 261 = יַעֲקֹב; munahḫimu UT 1634 = מִנְחָהּ), which enable very close comparisons to be made. Some five per cent of Ugaritic vocabulary can now be vocalized. With three glossaries to be compared, as well as the study by J. Gray, The Legacy of Canaan (1957, expanded in the second ed. 1965) it is possible to some degree for the researcher to check whether the meaning of an Ugaritic word has been established. The most recent texts to have appeared since the recommencement of excavations in 1958 (see AfO 19:193ff; 20:206ff; 21:131ff) were published by C.F.A. Schaeffer in Ugaritica V, partly utilized by Gordon (see UT 538ff), but were first made available by Eissfeldt in his studies in Neue Keilalphabetische Texte. Citations in this work are from UT; to change over later to the scheme of Andrée Herdner's still more comprehensive Corpus (1963) was not practicable. Although Gordon perceives connections with “Minoan” through Cretan Linear A (Min. Cr. 29ff) it did not seem appropriate to deal with them here so long as the presentation of the material is not fully presented and not discussed.

h. Phoenician and Punic vocabulary is listed in the grammars of Z.S. Harris (1936) and J. Friedrich (1951), as well as by C.F. Jean and J. Hoftijzer in DISO (1965), by H. Donner and W. Röllig in KAI (1964), which include Aramaic material. For the personal names, which often include verbal stems otherwise lost and are published separately in DISO, it is still best to turn to Lidzbarski's Handbuch and to his Ephemeris (1902-15), to Wuthnow (but see Noth ZDMG 87 (1923) 240ff), as well as to academic journals like Syria and ZDMG, and to special publications like Recueil des Téphères de Palmyre (1955).

i-j. For the Aramaic parts we now have the significant and recent publication Mandaic Dictionary (MdD) by E.S. Drower and R. Macuch (1963). It is a dictionary based on a catalogue left by M. Lidzbarski (who died in 1928), then compiled by Lady Drower from her manuscripts, and then written by R. Macuch during his studies among the Mandaic community in Khuzistan. Ten thousand words have been recorded there, so Mandaic can now justify its place beside what had previously been the normative references for Aramaic, Judaeo-Aramaic and Syriac. Macuch deals in his grammar (1965) also with the Neo-Mandaic he encountered in Khuzistan. While by its very nature Mandaic is more important for Biblical Aramaic (see KBL) it is nonetheless an advantage for the study of Hebrew. Thus Mandaic הַאֲלֵצָא (MdD 122a) in contrast with BArm., JArm., and Sam. הַרְצָא (> Syr. ḥaṣṣā) and CPArm. ḥirṣā confirms ḥalṣ as the basic Semitic form (in contrast with the view of Brockelmann VG 1:246). Occasionally a word survives in Mandaic which has been missing even from Syriac, like מִצְרַר and מִקְקַר .

k. For Akkadian there are now two excellent, comprehensive (although not completed) dictionaries available, von Soden's AHW. (1965–) and the Chicago Assyrian Dictionary (= CAD, 1956–). These have significantly extended the lexicographical stock from that of earlier times, and for the first time offer the opportunity to distinguish dialects regionally and temporally (see von Soden Gramm. §2), which is important for the debate over cognates in Hebrew. Just as Akkadian loan words (like שֶׁלֶם) have long been recognized in Sumerian, so now Western Semitic and especially Aramaic words can also be found in Akkadian (see von Soden Gramm. §192, 193; Orient. 35 (1966) 1ff). Many a word which H. Zimmern for his part felt had an Akkadian origin (as אֲנָרִית, אֲנָ) is considered differently today, a possibility with which he had already reckoned; an early transition directly from Sumerian has been assumed for → הִיכָל.

The texts from Mari occupy a special position as that Old Babylonian vernacular dialect has some unusual features (see von Soden Gramm. §4d, 1; Finet Mari p. vi). It is clearly Western Semitic, yet appears also early in the “Land of the Two Rivers”, as in the name of the kings of the First Dynasty of Babylon. The representatives of this language are usually described as Amorites or East Canaanites (though with questionable justification (see Noth Die Welt des AT 212ff; Huffmon Amorite Personal Names 1ff). Amorite is to be understood as a conventional term for language designation. The language of the Amarna Letters (→ EA) is related to but not identical with Ugaritic. What is interesting for the Hebraist is not just the interspersed Canaanite glosses but also the “Canaanite barbarized Akkadian” (see von Soden Gramm. §2 1).

l. For Old South Arabian the Glossary of Conti of 1931 has now been supplemented by the works of W.W. Müller, where, for the first time, an Arabic equivalent for גִּרְיָ appears (ZAW 75 (1963) 308), and בִּוּר “grave” (Pr 28₁₇) is confirmed by brt (ZAW 75:307).

For the Ethiopic group of languages Dillmann’s Ge’ez Lexicon (1865) has been supplemented by the valuable and comprehensive Tigre Dictionary of E. Littmann and Maria Höfner (1962), although there language comparison does not go beyond Arabic. Dillmann’s attention had already been drawn to the lexicographical stock shared with Hebrew, and Leslau and Ullendorff have pursued this further, including the use of local dialects. It is Ethiopic halaya “sing” that has provided the first usable etymology for the previously unexplained מִחֵלֶת. For Neo-South Arabian dialects see Leslau, 2f.

m. Much information about Hebrew words which survive in European languages can now be found in the work of K. Lokotsch (1927) and in S.A. Wolf’s Wörterbuch des Rotwelsch (1956) as well as in Littmann’s Morgenländische Wörter (1924); see also Kutscher’s Words and their History (in Hebrew, 1961).

3. The progress that has been thus achieved is best seen by comparing this Lexicon with the first edition. There Koehler successfully emphasized the “words and ideas” viewpoint, but the modern massive increase in studies of Biblical and extra-Biblical material with its attendant consequences requires more attention. Many an etymological question can now be clarified, apparently irregular forms of words and hapax legomena which had been regarded suspiciously prove to be acceptable, and meanings are often more accurately defined.

But this brings new difficulties. Koehler once expressed himself along the lines that it should soon become possible, with the progress of Hebrew lexicography, to free the Dictionary from this mass of material and to structure it in a simpler form; I am not able to share his optimism. It is the new material in particular that complicates matters and increases some of our problems; often we are obliged to contemplate various possibilities for the derivation of a word and come to no firm conclusion.

Such is the case with the many personal names that end in -yah (Adoniah, Uriah, etc.) known from Hurrian as well as Hebrew. There it must be theophoric but here a simple personal ending. Bathsheba’s husband is expressly described as אֲדֹנָי, which (according to Assyrian usage) in the OT means the same as Hurrian; so the latter option seems preferable. But would this also be the case for the other purely Israelite bearers of the name, especially in a fuller form like אֲדֹנָי־יְהוָה? Are we dealing with a double origin of the name or with a Hurrian name Hebraized and later “Yahweh-ized” in Israel? In a similar way we are obliged to choose between a Hebrew and an Egyptian origin for the name אֲבִיּוֹן.

If we turn to compare the first edition of the Lexicon it is interesting to note how the remark “unexplained” does not now occur nearly as often. Solutions have often been found; and where this is not the case at least some indication is given of the directions in which various solutions are being sought. Often some other ideas of an explanation are presented alongside the preferred one. Naturally there are times when one's personal views are to be renounced so that various other suggestions can be pursued.

Furthermore many of the proposals for textual change in the first edition have now been abandoned. New studies have swept the ground away from many conjectural emendations, or a better comprehension of the context or the study of dialect forms (like those from the Northern Kingdom in the language of Hosea, see Rudolph Hos. 20) have often made emendation unnecessary. The juxtaposition of word forms which were probably originally separated by local or temporal dialect boundaries is now more widely recognized than before; so that Ps 144₁₄ has אֶלְיָה “ox” (Sir 38₂₅) beside the usual אֶלֶף II. The text is not changed as much or as often as it was at the turn of the century. Nevertheless this greater trust in the reliability of the text as received should not be overvalued, for often there are grounds for new conjectures.

The prevalent contemporary inclination of confining emendation to Masoretic vowels and regarding the consonantal text as more or less taboo is not without danger. Of course changes in vocalization are easier and are often already anticipated in the traditional text, but the extent to which consonantal change was also possible can be observed more than adequately in the parallel passages of the OT (Ps 14₅₃; 2S 22; Ps 18 etc).

We should also remember the cases (which are not so rare) where an older conjecture, perhaps made on the basis of other versions but perhaps without them, has been subsequently confirmed by more recent textual evidence, such as אֵל בְּנֵי דַת 32₈ (→V אֵל III 1a). On the other hand a textual alteration based on extra-biblical evidence can remove an old problem and supply the dictionary with a new word. So it was that Immanuel Löw in his time enriched the dictionary with * עִמְלִיךְ “shark” from Arb. maṭīṣ “slippery, smooth” in Ps 74₁₄, and that Albright was able to extract from Ugaritic a Hebrew root * חָתַח “destroy” to explain אָנֹךְ חָתַח in Hab 3₇.

The vast mass of scholarly literature has been referred to so far as time and space has allowed. The printing process took a long time, and so it was possible to incorporate much of the literature of the last years at least into the Addenda. It goes without saying that much, and that includes much valuable, information has escaped me. To make room for newer material much of the old has had to be erased, although it was a matter of concern to me not to allow the names of the previous generations of scholars to be lost. Those wishing to examine a word more fully would do well to consult KBL, GB and BDB.

4. It remains for me to thank all those who have helped to complete the production of this work successfully: first and foremost my collaborators.

Benedikt Hartmann, who worked with me from the beginning, supervised the Arabic, took the responsibility of preparing part of the final copy, read the proofs with me and with whom I was able to discuss all the technical and practical matters which arose; E. Y. Kutscher, who put all his knowledge of Middle Hebrew and Aramaic at my disposal, read proofs and contributed to all kinds of linguistic discussions; Sigmund Morenz was my adviser for Egyptian after the death of Ursula Schweitzer; Wolfram von Soden for Assyriology; Maria Höfner for Old South Arabian; Manfred Mayrhofer for Indo-Iranian.

Lists of errata to the first edition came to me from all sides. The longest was from Udo Skladny, who was then scientific assistant to the University of Greifswald. And I also like to recall many a fruitful discussion I had with I. L. Seeligmann.

Special thanks are offered to F. C. Wieder, Director of E. J. Brill, who treated my requests (which were not always simple) very sympathetically, and also to Dr. A. van den Born, who proof read the last corrections with his sharp eyes.

May Koehler's Dictionary, in its new form, again be received well and stand the test of time.

Basel, March 1967

from the third edition (second fascicle)

by

Benedikt Hartmann

(on behalf of the editors)

Walter Baumgartner, who, after the death of Ludwig Koehler, took upon himself the responsibility of the new edition of the Lexicon, died at the end of January 1970. With the agreement of the publishers, B. Hartmann, to whom the dictionary had already been familiar, assumed those duties, and during 1970 he enlisted Professor J.J. Stamm from Berne and Dr. P. Reymond from Lausanne to assist in the task of editing.

Nevertheless this fascicle has come almost entirely from the pen of Walter Baumgartner. Although the editors have sought to provide references to recent literature, and have occasionally found it necessary to change the text, there were restrictions on how far they could go, because most of the manuscript had already been produced in galley-proofs.

So much extra material has now been included that the list of abbreviations has had to be revised, and it now includes those used but not indexed in the first fascicle. However we have refrained from changing the style of the citations so as to preserve consistency in the work as a whole.

Originally it was our intention that this second fascicle should include entries as far as 'ayin, but we have had to allow it to stop where the material provided by E.Y. Kutscher (before his death late in 1971) came to an end.

We owe special thanks also for this volume to Dr. A. van den Born, who has checked the proofs meticulously. Furthermore we would thank our assistants VDM Peter Bärtschi (Berne) and Drs. Fokke Plat (Leiden) for discharging many duties in the course of the preparation of the dictionary, and also for checking the proofs.

The continued publication of the Lexicon has been made possible with the support of the Swiss National Endowment for Scientific Research. We cannot fail to thank their Board for the understanding way they have met our requests.

We do not want this second fascicle to appear without expressing our respect and gratitude for Walter Baumgartner, who has been the teacher of us all. It is a singular testimony to his devotion to the work of scholarship.

[1974]

from the third edition (third fascicle)

by

Johann Jakob Stamm

This, the third, fascicle of our Lexicon has taken longer to publish than we had expected when the second fascicle appeared in 1974. That is due in the main to the fact that we have had to prepare a more or less completely new manuscript, since we have exhausted those pages which had earlier been prepared by Baumgartner. Although some pages drafted by Baumgartner were available for the first part we had to prepare the whole of the text from עֵרֶרֶת onwards ourselves; and this was the responsibility of J.J. Stamm.

As it had been from the beginning of the Lexicon, for it had been Baumgartner's special concern, we have continued to pay particular attention to the relationship of individual items of vocabulary with the other Semitic Languages. The resources at our disposal to accomplish this have now increased. There are the new fascicles of the Akkadisches Handwörterbuch prepared by W. von Soden, the dictionaries for Phoenician and Punic names, prepared by F.L. Benz, and, for Palmyrene personal names, prepared by J.K. Stark; further details can be noted in the supplements to the list of bibliographical abbreviations in the second and third fascicles.

The dictionaries of Aistleitner and Gordon continue to be indispensable for Ugaritic, but research has advanced further so that when short references to these two works occur they often have to be extended with references to individual reinterpretations in associated studies with their differing conclusions.

But our greatest responsibility has been to deal with the Hebrew. We have sought to place our basic trust in the text in its traditional form with the result that we have no longer been able to include many of the conjectural emendations that our predecessors mentioned, and, to a small degree, we have replaced older with newer material. It is this same attitude to the Hebrew text that has led us to exercise care in the tendency to introduce new words or forms into the lexicon with the help of the cognate languages (especially at the present time Ugaritic). However we do recognise those that are really justified.

So far as was possible we have taken into account the recent scholarly literature in the commentaries, the books and the articles, but we are aware that that can have been incomplete; given the amount of material some gaps are certainly unavoidable.

On the whole it is our intention to give more space to ideas of exegetes than was formerly the case. Although the possibilities of an extensive discussion in a dictionary are heavily restricted nothing must be allowed to appear as certain when certainty is not there. Furthermore we have differed from our predecessors in making a more basic distinction between those substantives that can be seen to derive from verbs and those that can not (the so called primary nouns); for amplification see ZAW 90 (1978) 112-114.

E.Y. Kutscher, our esteemed colleague for Middle Hebrew and Jewish Aramaic, died at the end of 1971. With the agreement of the publishers the editors persuaded Z. Ben Hayyim, Professor at the Hebrew University of Jerusalem and Fellow of the Hebrew Language Academy, to participate in the Lexicon. From then on (that is to say for the present volume) he took over the responsibility of providing all the Hebrew and Aramaic contributions which had been assigned to Professor Kutscher. Ben Hayyim naturally brought with him contributions from Samaritan, not only providing references to the material of the Samaritan Pentateuch but also to that of the dialect of Samaritan Aramaic.

We were obliged to turn to Wolfram von Soden in Münster when we were faced with special problems concerning Akkadian, and to Robert Hanhart in Göttingen for those concerning the Septuagint. For the information that both of them so freely gave us we should like to offer them on this occasion our deepest thanks.

Some of the students from the Altorientalische Seminar in the University of Berne who were free have been able to lend their assistance to J.J. Stamm in consulting books and periodicals; they are Konrad Haldimann (Cand. Theol.), Elisabeth Schaedeli (Cand. Theol.), and Brigitte Stol (Cand. Theol.). Drs. S.M. Moors from the University of Leiden has helped in the correction of proofs. Warm thanks are due to them all for their help.

The continuation of the lexicon has again been made possible with the support of the Swiss National Council for the Advancement of Scientific Research. We cannot fail to thank the Board for their understanding attitude to our project.

While this third fascicle has been in the press we have begun to work on the fourth and last fascicle. We have no clear estimate of when it is likely to appear but we hope very much that there will not be so long a gap as there was between the second and the third.

Berne, Spring 1983

from the third edition (fourth fascicle)

by

Benedikt Hartmann,

on behalf of the editors

There have been seven years between the appearance of the third and the present fourth fascicle of the Lexicon. And when one considers the extent of the fourth fascicle, with nearly 600 pages, the amount of working time that has been spent on it can properly be understood.

In general it maintains the procedures of the earlier fascicles, especially those of the third fascicle, but it should be noted that there are now fuller discussions of questionable points of detail, especially those concerning uncertain etymologies and interpretations of particular Biblical passages. In these cases the results of individual research (insofar as they could be understood) have been summarized and assessed. Naturally it was not always possible to make a clear decision whether one conclusion we had seen should be adopted in favour of another.

In addition we have continued the practice (already begun in the third fascicle) of emphasizing the connections or idiomatic expressions of the key word. These expressions will provide the reader with the widest and most exhaustive information about the connections of a noun with particular verbs.

from the third edition (final remarks)

by

Benedikt Hartmann

A dictionary is stamped with its author's personality. This is as true for the original Lexicon in Veteris Testamenti Libros by Ludwig Koehler and Walter Baumgartner (KBL) as for the revised edition by Walter Baumgartner and Johann Jakob Stamm, Hebräisches und Aramäisches Lexicon zum Alten Testament (HAL). The chosen scheme (or profile as it is sometimes now called) tends to restrict the freedom of the compiler. For the whole of HAL (and also in part for KBL) every entry consisted of four parts of explanation and discussion.

1. Etymology: The data which became available from the cognate languages and which we could utilize as HAL moved towards completion was essentially far better than what had been available for KBL. It benefited from new dictionaries like DISO for the ancient Semitic languages, AHw. and CAD for Akkadian, and Mdd for Mandaic.

2. Forms: All forms of words attested in the Old Testament were recorded in the appropriate entry.

3. Meaning: Biblical references were collected according to the range of meaning for each entry.

4. Bibliography: Under these three headings we were able frequently to provide detailed references to scholarly literature which supported particular suggestions and helped the reader towards further research.

At the beginning of the project certain details had not been decided or identified as problems and so it was only later that solutions were proposed: dies diem docet.

When he began his work on the dictionary what interested Ludwig Koehler (1880-1956) most were the real life situations behind the vocabulary of the Old Testament. They fascinated Koehler, with his imaginative and inventive mind, the preacher who cared for the souls of the people, the one who took his official part in life to the widest extent. To attack the substance of these words head on demanded all the facets of his knowledge and expertise as well as his imagination and courage. It was clearly not just a new dictionary he had in his mind; after his early publications his colleagues had encouraged him to undertake a revision of the Hebräisches und Aramäisches Handwörterbuch über das Alte Testament by Wilhelm Gesenius and F. Buhl (GB), which at that time had not been revised since 1908/15. Koehler heard their call but was clearly of a different opinion, for he had already realised that his work differed in so many points from that of GB. He came to the conclusion therefore that he would make a Lexicon which was to be completely different, and not simply to be regarded as a new edition of GB, a conclusion which was not altogether surprising for a strong willed “one-year volunteer”. He saw his dictionary as his very own, sealed with his own hand. I once drew his attention to one instance where he had not quoted an Arabic equivalent whereas there were others where he had. He replied, “On that occasion it seemed to me irrelevant, but on the others it was relevant. I am the one who decides what to put in. After all it is my dictionary.” Koehler’s personality is clearly stamped on the Hebrew part of KBL.

Similarly Koehler’s friend Walter Baumgartner (1887-1970) prepared the Aramaic part of KBL separately and in his own way. Distinguished as he was in Old Testament and Orientalist scholarship, he had an unruffled studious nature. He would withdraw into his study and complete his work with persistent effort. His systematic mind would not fail to annotate the manuscript of each entry with accurate appraisals of the results of advanced research in general Semitics. It is therefore futile to search through the Aramaic part for any proposed etymological information which was available to him at the time but which he happened to omit.

When Koehler had died a new edition of KBL was suggested and it was natural to entrust the work to the care of Baumgartner. It is perhaps worth remembering that before he began his revision he devoted the next year to prepare himself for the task. He systematically read again the whole of the Old Testament and prepared critical notes and translations. Only then did he begin work on the dictionary itself. Methodology counted most. He distinguished himself by his attention to accuracy, consistency and authoritative opinion on the Old Testament world and Oriental scholarship. He was more interested in questions about historical and religious development than about real life situations and Baumgartner thus made his own mark on the new edition.

During his life he was enthusiastic about shorthand and stenography. He used it from day to day, not only for notes but also for the text of lectures and conference addresses. He put brevity as one of the editorial principles for the dictionary entries and did not confine it to the shortening of the names of scholars but included the style (!) of the list of abbreviations. He severely reduced summaries of scholarly opinions and simply denoted alternative views by using the double colon (::). If he felt there was something to be said for a proposal he would describe the kernel of the idea in a word or two marked with a single colon. Less plausible ideas were relegated to the bibliographical references. That which he did not consider important enough for consideration he would discard. His motto was to save space.

When Baumgartner died Johann Jakob Stamm (b. 1910) was persuaded to work on the dictionary. He was an important Old Testament and Orientalist scholar in Bern and he was able to step into the breach successfully; he committed himself wholeheartedly with his vast knowledge of Old Testament research and the Semitic languages. He made many improvements to the dictionary, of which those arising from his expertise in Semitic personal names are just some. He systematically worked through those entries still to be done with accuracy and constructive criticism. From masses of ideas about etymology or the use of vocabulary in essential parts of the Old Testament he chose the most important. Herein lay a clear difference from Baumgartner but one which has nothing to do with Old Testament or Semitic studies. While Baumgartner can be seen as the master of brevity, Stamm is the master of explanation. His entries are longer. He does not restrict himself to the provision of bibliographical information but sets out the different results of research and balances them one against the other. He is a born teacher who carefully explains why he prefers one interpretation to another. On those occasions where there is some uncertainty about a conclusion he observes, “Non liquet”. Moreover (and this may have surprised many readers) he shows how often the sense of a word is uncertain; in KBL it was left open. Word usage, especially the linking of nouns and verbs, was one of Stamm’s main concerns. By sailing in so full a stream Stamm saved his readers much time. They have all the problems of a word spelled out in every detail.

They need not consult articles in full for they can follow the threads of the argument with HAL at their side, and that is one of the significant differences of Stamm's contributions.

There were also two collaborators from Israel. Baumgartner had met Eduard Yechezkel Kutscher (1909-1971), Professor of Hebrew and Aramaic at the Hebrew University of Jerusalem, during a visit to Jerusalem and he was persuaded to help with the Hebrew and Aramaic material. This eminent scholar applied his unsurpassed knowledge in the field of these cognate languages. He distinguished MHb.¹ (Mishnah, Toseftah, Halachim Midrash) from MHb.² (the two Talmuds, Haggadic Midrash) and separated Aramaic into three regional dialects.

After his death Ze'ev Ben Hayyim (b. 1907), also Professor at the Hebrew University of Jerusalem and Member of the Academy of Hebrew Language, was persuaded to take his place. He specialises in Samaritan studies to include the Samaritan Pentateuch and the Samaritan dialects and he has made considerable improvements to these philological sections of the Lexicon.

The different approaches that are evident in the Lexicon can therefore be explained from this background information about the collaborators. Every one of the contributors has put his own seal on his contributions through his character and personality, his way of life and his method of working.

We could ask, "Quid est bonum?", but would have to be content with the reply "Non liquet". Every one of the scholars has performed his task differently from his colleagues. But differently does not have to mean better or worse; it is not an assessment of quality. Scholarship can be honestly justified in a number of different ways. Let us be grateful that the Lexicon has provided the opportunity to show such difference.

So far as the technology of production is concerned, KBL and HAL reflect the change in working methods from a past age to a new world. Koehler copied out the whole of his manuscript for the printer by himself; he used blue school exercise books which I remember were kept neat and clean in the space between two bookshelves behind the chair in his study. Baumgartner prepared his manuscript in a similar way and the publisher's copy of the two first fascicles of HAL (to p. 624) were submitted in handwriting by Baumgartner and myself. But from then on the publishers were no longer happy to receive copy in this form. After the death of Baumgartner we were able to recruit Philippe Reymond (b. 1918) as editor. He expressed his willingness to fill the gap and to undertake the work in addition to his valuable scholarly contributions to HAL. He undertook the exhausting and not very exciting task of preparing typescripts for the third fascicle onwards.

The printing process has also changed. Brill had set the older fascicles of HAL in lead type but from the fourth fascicle onwards (from p. 1081 of the German edition) modern computer typesetting techniques have been used. Inge Angevaere has become not just the lady who is expert at preparing computer readable text but, more importantly, the first lady to be actively involved in the project of the Lexicon. She deserves our warmest thanks.

There are some other names which I could not fail to mention before closing, all of whom have made significant contributions to the success of our work.

Dr. A. van den Born should be thanked for having corrected the first two fascicles (to p. 624 of the German edition) with great accuracy; he had an exceptional ability to pick out errors and inconsistencies.

F.C. Wieder, W. Backhuys and F.H. Pruyt, Directors of E.J. Brill, are to be thanked for their sympathetic understanding of our project and for being willing to accept it in their programme of publication.

Finally special thanks are due to the Swiss National Endowment for Scientific Research for the tremendous subsidy they have provided for many years; this is the financial resource which has made it possible to complete the Lexicon.

Preface

It is a pleasure to say that, having completed the fifth and final volume, not only has a natural sense of relief begun to dawn but also the sense of privilege with which I began the task continues to shine, inasmuch as I have been able to see it through to its conclusion.

In the course of my work it became clear to me that the haste in which the editors of the German edition were obliged to finish their work on vol. 5 (see below, Foreword) had resulted in a number of misleading references; where I could I corrected these. A very detailed review by Michael Sokoloff (see Dead Sea Discoveries 7 (2000), pp. 74-109), which pointed out many more addenda et corrigenda for a large number of paragraphs, appeared just in time for me to be able to incorporate them in this edition; I have referred to his article in all but the most minor of the changes he requires. Otherwise I have followed the pattern of work for the English edition that I adopted for the previous volumes, continuing to introduce quotations from the NRSV and REB wherever it seemed appropriate to do so, as well as CAD and Wehr-Cowan for comparative philological material.

Just a few weeks ago I received a copy of the CD-Rom version of vols. 1-4, and my first impressions are that this will be a very much faster way to gain access to the many cross-references in the printed form of the dictionary, as well as introducing the possibility of understanding words more fully by making hyper-links, in particular to the text of BHS, Sept. and the bibliography of the École Biblique, Jerusalem.

Appended to this volume is a very long and detailed Supplementary Bibliography. While the bibliography originally published in HAL (see pp. xxii-xlv; see also HALOT pp. xii-lxiii) gives fuller information than that published in the text of the Lexicon, there is a considerable amount of supplementary literature referred to in the individual articles which is not mentioned at all in that bibliography. Some of those references are barely adequate, and moreover it is important, particularly for readers of the English version, to have a record of what supplementary literature was referred to by the original editors, and also to be aware of what was not mentioned. That is primarily why a supplementary bibliography has been prepared.

The basic material was assembled by Barsaüm Can, who assisted me also for vol. 4 while he was a student at Leiden University. He worked on the references in vols. 1-4, to which I added those from vol. 5. Without his diligent help it would not have been possible to include this material in this volume. It goes without saying that extreme care has to be exercised in recalling which of the earlier volumes of HAL could not have included the more recently published articles.

The supplementary bibliography does not repeat material recorded in the principal bibliography. It can most conveniently be used in conjunction with the CD-Rom edition of HALOT, for the search facility on that disk will quickly show just where and how often any given reference occurs. Wherever possible more information is given here than in the text of the Lexicon, particularly concerning the titles and dates of articles. Had we had more time and resources this printed text could have been improved, but it seemed best to publish it in this basic form and to plan to integrate it with the text of the principal bibliography and abbreviations in time for the upgraded CD-Rom next year.

My thanks are due as ever to the tremendous support of the management of Brill Academic Publishers; in particular for this volume I would mention Anita Disseldorp and Anniek Meinders-Durksz, who solved the many and varied production problems; and of course also, as for all the previous volumes, Hans van der Meij. It should not be forgotten that without his imparting to us his original vision and confidence at the very beginning of the project we could still be at square one.

Glancing back over the decade it is a pleasure again to record my thanks to my former colleagues at the University of Manchester who allowed me to take sabbatical leave to complete vol. 1 and begin vol. 2, to the British Academy for research support funds to complete vols. 2 and 3, and to my physicians for keeping me well enough for vols. 4 and 5. And through all the changing scenes of life there has always been my בְּעֵלָה אֲשֶׁת-חַיִל עִמָּרְתָּ; she shared every moment of trouble and joy, and without her there would have been nothing.

Finally I would thank all my colleagues and friends who have never failed to give me advice of a general and a particular nature when asked. Now it is finished I hope that they, as well as the readers whom I do not know, will put aside any thoughts they may have had about the first part of the proverb מִמְשָׁכָה ׀ חֲלָה-לֵב וְעֵץ חַיִּים תִּאָּוֶה בְּאֶה תוֹחֲלֶת: rather let them cultivate what follows, בְּאֶה תִּאָּוֶה.

Foreword

The publication of the fifth volume of this Hebrew-Aramaic Lexicon brings the work as a whole to its conclusion.

While it was being prepared the main editor, Professor Johann Jakob Stamm, passed away after a prolonged period of suffering on the 9th. November 1993. This tragic loss to the Lexicon has been felt bitterly. J. J. Stamm could understand the Semitic languages, especially the ancient ones, from all angles, and as such he immersed himself probably more than anyone else in the world of Old Testament lexicography. Despite his illness he was able to prepare a draft manuscript as far as the letter qof.

After some delay I began to work through all the material that was available and to prepare the text for the last four letters of the alphabet, naturally in co-operation with my long-standing and strongly supportive colleague P. Reymond. For North-west Semitic inscriptions this year we have been able to use the new and completely revised two volume dictionary of Hoftijzer (DNWSI). In the etymological section of each lemma we have sought to provide precise bibliographical information, primarily from the dictionaries for the particular languages to which we have referred and, as had been done before, to expand this information whenever we could. But we were not able to do this completely, for we were obliged to make the poorer choice from that Arabic proverb which says “Patience comes from God, but haste belongs to the Devil”. Despite this, we feel that those who succeed us will be able to improve and expand our work.

We are sorry that after having given more than twenty years of immense scholarly help and influence Professor Z. Ben Ḥayyim has been obliged because of ill health to end his active collaboration. But we are grateful that we have been able to make use of the fruit of his wisdom as published in LOT and Rosenthal’s Aramaic Handbook. For technical typographical reasons it was not possible to print the combination \bar{a} and \acute{a} , which should have been used for Samaritan, and so we have decided to use simply \bar{a} .

It remains for us to express our words of thanks for all the help that we have received over the course of the last years. First of all we remember the Swiss National Foundation for Scientific Research, which for a long period has maintained its financial support.

Then we would like to thank the publisher E. J. Brill and its director R. J. Kastelijn; in particular we must mention the editor, Hans van der Meij. He has always provided helpful and purposeful guidance in his characteristically diplomatic matter and he has sweetened some bitter pills with his natural kindness.

Finally thanks are due to some of my former students, Dr. Johannes Tromp, Dr. Joost Holleman and Jaap Opendijk, who have prepared the final copy for the press; they have also made some helpful corrections to the text and provided supplementary bibliographical material for Syriac and Neo-Syriac.

I hope that the new Koehler-Baumgartner-Stamm will be a help to those who use it, knowing full well that dies diem docet, the motto of Gesenius-Bühl, is and will be appropriate for both the readers and the writers of a lexicon like this.

Autumn 1995

Preface to Volume 2

This second volume of Koehler-Baumgartner in English covers another eight letters of the alphabet. It includes the last few entries from the first German fascicule of 1967, the whole of the second fascicule of 1974, and half of the third fascicule of 1983 (pp. 351-857). Those seventeen years saw significant changes in the team of participating editors and it was clearly difficult for them to maintain a consistency of style in every entry they wrote. Attempting to impose one on the English edition has also not been easy. Nevertheless I have done what I could to make the work as a whole more readable.

The first part of this volume (beginning of the letter ܒ to part way through ܥ) is based on an electronically scanned version of the original German text prepared by Dr. K. Jongeling, such as was used also for Vol. 1. He and his assistants had also prepared a draft translation of those pages, and this was put at my disposal, together with a draft translation of ܦ which had been made independently by Dr. Donald Schley. No scanned material after p. 500 was available, so the rest has been set manually. Both electronic scanning and manual settings have advantages and disadvantages, but having now worked for some time with both I have decided to continue my work using the latter method.

The final volume of the German edition (the Aramaic volume) has also been set manually. When I wrote my preface to Vol. I in December 1993 everyone thought that it would only be a little while before that Aramaic volume would appear. Sadly Professor Stamm died very soon afterwards and it is only now that we can be confident of its imminent appearance. Dr. Johannes Tromp, who helped me so much with Volume 1, has been helping to bring that work to completion. In his stead for the onerous task of proofreading I have enjoyed the assistance principally of Dr. Joost Holleman of the Faculty of Divinity, and also of a number of other students of Hebrew in Leiden; at an earlier stage considerable assistance was also given by Mr. Erik Larson.

The changes introduced into the original text are similar in spirit to the ones made in pp. 1-350, which seem in retrospect to have been comparatively homogeneous. The general aim has been to include all that was in the original, and then to make any necessary supplementation or modification to enable readers more quickly to trace the passage they are seeking and to locate the copious cross-references with which the work abounds. There is now more extensive paragraphing for the longer entries and the principle of keeping initials only for periodical publications and very well-known works has been extended. In fact there now be much less need to consult the long list of abbreviations in Vol. I. For the occasional references to secondary literature which has not been previously listed in the general bibliography I have prepared a supplement and this will be expanded to include all other occasional references in the work and it is intended to publish a fully revised bibliography in the last volume of this series.

One of the problems now addressed more consistently is the translation of biblical quotations. There are many occasions when the German means the same as what is used in one of the commonly used English translations; but selecting and noting a translation closest to the German would have been too subjective. I have therefore referred primarily to the Revised English Bible (1992) or the New Revised Standard Version (1989) for comparison, and have sometimes added a note if one of them is significantly different. Though glossing a word in a dictionary will often produce a different result from translating it in its biblical context, to have ignored these recent important scholarly translations (which will certainly have referred to discussions in Koehler-Baumgartner) would have made this addition less useful for the audience for which it is designed. Similarly, where conjectural emendations are discussed which have also been noted in BHS I have slipped in an appropriate reference even though it was not mentioned in the original, especially if further support for the emendations is provided there.

Philological remarks have sometimes been modified, especially some references to Akkadian. I have assumed readers of this book will more readily consult CAD than AHw.; but when the editors of CAD worked on an entry which had already been covered in AHw., they often came to a different conclusion. Even though some of these conclusions will have been published after HAL, such references have been checked wherever it seemed necessary to do so. My translation of an Akkadian word will usually follow CAD when it agrees with AHw., and where it disagrees I have said so. I felt obliged also to change references to suggested Arabic cognates taken from Wehr's dictionary, and have preferred to substitute references to Cowan's translation of that dictionary, with a corresponding change of page numbers. Just as the original editors preferred to use Gibsons's re-edition of Driver's Canaanite Myths for Ugaritic etymologies in the later stages of their dictionary, so also I have not been adverse to adding a reference to Hoftijzer and Jongeling's Dictionary, which has effectively replaced DISO. This seemed particularly important when alternative readings, different interpretations or new lemmata were concerned.

The long list of corrections and additions previously published in the original volumes has been incorporated into the body of this text, as well as the additional corrections which are to be published in the two-volume German edition recently announced by the publishers. Some other typographical errors have been corrected without comment. Making changes like this automatically increases the risk of introducing new errors; I have corrected what I have noticed, but for any that have been missed and for any that have been introduced I apologise.

Work like this cannot be completed without the unfailing support of one's friends. Throughout the period of preparation of this volume it is my immediate family who deserve most heartfelt thanks. My children Philip, Stephen, Gail and Ruth have been willing not only to cope with the pressures that such an exhausting project puts on family life, but to give active support by undertaking some of the mundane tasks of scholarship: cutting and pasting texts for translation, typing up long parts of the manuscript in both roman and semitic fonts, checking pagination and headers in the proofs. It was done even though none of them knew Hebrew. And Helen, my wife, has helped me on numerous occasions with translation difficulties as well as inspiring me more than anyone else to continue to strive to reach the end.

Furthermore such a project should not be simply slotted into the end of a university lecturer's normal working day, with its daily round of teaching, administration and meetings. It demands long hours of uninterrupted silence in a well-stocked and well-arranged library. For the last two months these conditions have been granted me through a Research Leave Fellowship from the British Academy. I am grateful to the administrators of this fund and to my supporters (Professor J.C.L. Gibson of Edinburgh and Professor R. Gordon of Cambridge) as well as my colleagues in Manchester for allowing me leave. It has meant that Volume II is now complete before the end of this year and work on the next volume is already well advanced.

The publishers have continued to provide the necessary technical support and planning and again special thanks are due to Hans van der Meij and Pim Rietbroek, who have both been unstinting in their encouragement. It seems appropriate to recall the words of Lewis and Short:

"Great advances have been made in the sciences on which lexicography depends. Minute research in manuscript authorities has largely restored the texts of the classical writer, and even their orthography. Philology has traced the growth and history of thousands of words, and revealed meanings and shades of meaning which were long unknown. Syntax has been subjected to a profounder analysis. The history of ancient nations, the private life of their citizens, the thoughts and beliefs of their writers have been closely scrutinized in the light of accumulating information. Thus the student of today may justly demand of his Dictionary far more than the scholarship of thirty years ago could furnish. The present work is the result of a series of earnest efforts by the Publishers to meet this demand."

Though penned in New York as long ago as 1879 as part of the advertisement for their great Latin Dictionary, their remarks seem particularly appropriate to a Hebrew Dictionary for today.

To have had the opportunity again to work in the Nederlands Instituut voor het Nabije Oosten and the University of Leiden has meant that all I have needed has been provided with a lack of fuss and an abundance of civility. I would particularly thank the Director, Dr. J. de Roos, and Professor Klaas Veenhof for allowing this to happen.

Preface to Volume 3

It is just twelve months since I completed reading the final proofs of the second volume of this Lexicon, and not one of those months has passed slowly. Now that it is time to hand to the printer the final corrected proofs of the third volume I recall how often last winter and spring I retired from my desk at night burdened with the thought of so many pages still to be written; but as the early summer mornings dawned I was deeply grateful that more than half the work was already "in the press" and there was real hope that the job could be ready on time. I should like to thank, therefore, all those people who have supported me throughout the year by word and deed.

The personal commitment of Hans van der Meij and Pim Rietbroek (on behalf of the publishers) to this volume has been no less than it was to the previous ones. But to have completed so much so quickly is in no small measure due to the fact that the publishers were also able to provide technical assistance in the person of Joost Holleman. He had assisted me in the closing stages of Volume II, and he has been closely involved with Volume III from beginning to end. At the same time he has been preparing the core material for the final (supplementary) volume of the German edition, and that this should have just now been published, in the same week that the editorial work on this volume has been completed, is gratifying for us both.

For a major project such as that to which we have committed ourselves to be successfully accomplished there is need to have a sustained period with an open timetable devoted only to that one project. I should therefore like to record my thanks to the British Academy for giving the necessary financial support to the University of Manchester to enable me to take the whole year 1995-1996 away from my teaching and administrative duties. Without this help the volume could not have been completed so quickly. The bibliographical resources available in Leiden University have been exemplary and to have had the companionship of the Semitists in NINO has again introduced much pleasure into the unavoidable pain of preparing the intricate copy. To have been able to live in the placid surroundings of the village of Woubrugge with my close family and welcoming neighbours has done more than I could have imagined to make the days of rest also days of recuperation.

Readers will notice that although the page style is unaltered from earlier volumes, and the pagination of the first volume corresponded more or less to that of the original German text, this volume is some ten per cent fuller than the original. The main reason for this is the more extensive inclusion of quotations from modern English Bibles (primarily the REB and the NRSV) to accompany the original references to the Swiss (Zürcher Bibel) and French (Traduction oecuménique de la Bible) translations used by the original authors. Moreover I have frequently drawn attention to the similarities and discrepancies between REB and NEB, especially where references to "recent" scholarly literature had clearly influenced the NEB. As in the last volume I have further expanded the references to Akkadian, so that they now include citations from CAD volumes P, S, Sè and Q, which were not available to the original authors. Similarly Hoftijzer and Jongeling's Dictionary has been referred to much more extensively in this volume, so that all references to Hebrew inscriptions have been brought up to date.

I was provided with draft translations independently commissioned by the publishers for a substantial part of the material covered in this volume; a part of sade and all of qoph by Wilfred Watson, and resh and sin by Donald Schley (who it will be remembered had prepared some material for earlier volumes also). I would thank them and the publishers for making this material available; I have drawn freely from it, but adapted it extensively to fit into the general editorial style. Several free-lance proof readers, who happened to be available in Leiden at the requisite moment, have helped collate the English and German texts. They included Antonie Holleman, Gail Richardson, Ophirah Toff, and Jaap Oppedijk, who was kind enough to go far beyond the call of duty to draw my attention to inconsistencies and inadequacies in the material he examined. These many hands have certainly made the work lighter, and consequently it would be easier to shift the blame whenever mistakes are noticed. But that is not my intention; the final responsibility is mine; that we have all been able to work happily together throughout the year has made that responsibility enjoyable.

Just as Bauer and Leander (who are so often quoted in the Lexikon) regretted in the preface to their Historische Grammatik that they had not been able to eradicate from their book all Ungleichmässigkeiten, so with them I would hope that those that found in the following pages will not be sehr störend. After a year of such intensive work one is inclined to feel not unlike the ancient Sumerian sage Sinsamuh, when he wrote down in the words of his prayer to Enki, ab-ba nu-men gistu₂-mu ba-dugud igi-du₈-mu ba-gi₁₆-gi₁₆ (see W.W. Hallo JAOS 88:82); but the strains of the much more familiar poetry of Isaiah 40_{30f} can then be recalled as a fitting response, and this certainly encourages progress.

Preface to Volume 4

Now that the English version of the whole of the Hebrew section of HAL is complete thanks are due for the continued encouragement and support from the publishers. They have shown exceptional diligence in the production of this volume and, as before, Hans van der Meij has taken the major decisions. Unfortunately Pim Rietbroek, who took such an active part in the technical aspects of production of previous volumes, has been prevented because of ill-health from doing all that he would have liked to have done this time; his duties have been taken over by other members of the production team of Brill Academic Publishers.

I have been helped in the reading of the final proofs by a number of graduate students from Leiden University, including Matthijs de Jong, Myrthe Leydens, Jaap Oppedijk and Barsaum Can, who also checked bibliographical references in the later part of this volume; for the earlier part of the volume the necessary bibliographical checks were done by Aernold van Gosliga. I wish to express my thanks to all who have helped me bring this volume to completion.

After writing the preface to Volume 3 in November 1996 I had a confident hope that Volume 4 would be ready in another "year or so". But on the day before my own copy of that volume was sent to me by the printers I was suddenly taken into hospital because of serious heart problems. The succeeding months have been characterised by my strong desire to see this work completed quenched by the equally strong advice from my doctors to work more slowly. In these circumstances all of us involved in the project considered whether it would be better to abandon the introduction of supplementary material into the original German text so that the volume could be published earlier, or to maintain the style of improvements in earlier volumes with a consequential delay. We hope our decision to follow the latter course will agree with the views of the users of the dictionary.

In the beginning we had planned that the English edition would be of a similar length to the German edition; but it is now clear that p. 1659 (German) has become p. 1803 (English). I have outlined the reasons for this expansion in the preface to the two previous volumes and these innovations have been welcomed by colleagues and reviewers. Though all of us know that several more changes could have been made I felt strongly that to do more would presume too much upon the generosity of the publishers and the patience of the readers. But there is no doubt that having made available to a wider audience one of the most important reference tools for Hebraists and Semitists for the later part of this century a groundwork has been laid for further improvements to it in the next.

In view of the circumstances that have hindered production of the present volume, one hesitates to say that the basic work on preparing the manuscript of the final volume will be ready before the end of this year so that it can be published next Spring; nevertheless that is the plan. Furthermore now that the Hebrew section of the dictionary is complete the publishers have decided to produce a copy of the text on disk so that required material is more easily (and conveniently) accessible and future editions can more quickly (and cheaply) be brought up to date. It was just one hundred years ago that Carl Bezold, after he had prepared the second edition of Dillmann's grammar of Ge'ez, spoke of having endeavoured as well as he could to restore "the work of the much revered dead"; the aim of this version of Koehler and Baumgartner's work is similar, and the more one works with what they accomplished the more one respects the unstinting efforts of them and their successors.

Supplementary Bibliography

Where more than one work of a given writer is referred to the order adopted here is a chronological one; uncertain dates come at the head of a list. Primary references to reviews are given under the name of the reviewer; cross references from the author of the book under review have the date of the published review asterisked. Joint authorship involves a primary reference under the first mentioned author, with cross references from those subsequently mentioned using the + sign. References to page numbers are generally those as quoted in the text of the Lexicon rather than the whole extent of an article.

A. אָשֶׁר as a relative particle: אָשֶׁר marks the connection between two independent clauses;

—1. the Hebrew relative clause originally followed its antecedent without any connective indication: לֹא יִרְקַב עֵץ Is 40₂₀ “wood it will not rot” = wood that will not rot;

—2. the insertion of לֹא יִרְקַב אֶעֱיַן was especially common in prose and clarified the relative association: חֹל הַיָּם אֶחֱזֹל הַיָּם אֶ Hos 2₁ “the sand of the sea / אֶחֱזֹל הַיָּם אֶ/ it is not measured = the sand of the sea that can not be measured”; neither adding אֶ in Is 40₂₀ nor omitting it in Hos 2₁ would change the meaning;

—3. אֶ could also be omitted in Gn 21₂ אֶתּוֹ אָחֹזֵר אֶ “at the set time / אֶלְמוֹעֵד אֶ/ he had spoken it = at the set time of which he had spoken”; or Dt 1₂₂ אֶתְּהַלֵּךְ אֶ “the way / אֶתְּהַלֵּךְ אֶ/ we go up by it” = the way, by which we go up; or Gn 40₁₃ אֶתְּהַלֵּךְ אֶ “according to the earlier situation / אֶתְּהַלֵּךְ אֶ/ you were his butler” = when you were his butler; this is how the independent clause has developed into what we perceive as a dependent clause; the most appropriate relative construction to be used in translation (“of which”, “by which”, “when” etc.) depends on the context.

—4. in instances like אֶתְּהַלֵּךְ אֶ Is 5₂₈ “whose arrows are sharp” and like אֶתְּהַלֵּךְ אֶ Ps 95₅ “to whom the sea belongs” the pronominal reflex of the antecedent (לּוֹ, אֶתְּהַלֵּךְ) immediately follows אֶ; in terms of historical development this is later;

—5. even later is the appearance of a relative clause which lacks any reflex of the antecedent: אֶתְּהַלֵּךְ אֶ Gn 2₈ without אֶתּוֹ, אֶתְּהַלֵּךְ אֶ Dt 1₃₉ “about whom you say” without אֶתְּהַלֵּךְ אֶ, אֶתְּהַלֵּךְ אֶ Ju 8₁₅ “about whom you taunt me” without אֶתְּהַלֵּךְ אֶ; so any word relating to a preceding noun may be omitted and the sense of the omitted element is inferred from the the context.

—6. four stages of development in the relative clause may, therefore, be distinguished: a) the original relative clause without אֶתְּהַלֵּךְ אֶ; b) two independent clauses, the second of which is subordinated to the first one with אֶתְּהַלֵּךְ אֶ; c) the word in the relative clause which is the reflex of the antecedent immediately follows אֶתְּהַלֵּךְ אֶ; d) the elliptical relative clause with אֶתְּהַלֵּךְ אֶ and without a reflex for the antecedent; stage a occurs in older or poetical texts only, but stages b-d are used randomly;

—7. introducing glosses (Driver ATO 127): אֶתְּהַלֵּךְ אֶ Jr 32₉;

—8. אֶתְּהַלֵּךְ אֶ may be preceded by a preposition: אֶתְּהַלֵּךְ אֶ (there) where אֶתְּהַלֵּךְ אֶ Gn 21₁₇, that which אֶתְּהַלֵּךְ אֶ Is 56₄ by whom, → אֶתְּהַלֵּךְ אֶ (אֶתְּהַלֵּךְ אֶ): → אֶתְּהַלֵּךְ אֶ as אֶתְּהַלֵּךְ אֶ Gn 21₁; אֶתְּהַלֵּךְ אֶ from where אֶתְּהַלֵּךְ אֶ Ex 5₁₁, (nothing better) than that (man should rejoice) אֶתְּהַלֵּךְ אֶ Qoh 3₂₂; אֶתְּהַלֵּךְ אֶ עַל אֶתְּהַלֵּךְ אֶ 1K 18₁₂, אֶתְּהַלֵּךְ אֶ עִמָּם אֶתְּהַלֵּךְ אֶ Gn 31₃₂, אֶתְּהַלֵּךְ אֶ תַּחַת אֶתְּהַלֵּךְ אֶ Dt 28₆₂, אֶתְּהַלֵּךְ אֶ אֶתְּהַלֵּךְ אֶ Ex 33₁₂ אֶתְּהַלֵּךְ אֶ Nu 22₆, אֶתְּהַלֵּךְ אֶ לְאֶתְּהַלֵּךְ אֶ Is 49₉;

—9. preceded by nouns in the construct state: אֶתְּהַלֵּךְ אֶ מִקּוֹם אֶתְּהַלֵּךְ אֶ Gn 39₂₀ אֶתְּהַלֵּךְ אֶ 40₃ אֶתְּהַלֵּךְ אֶ יּוֹם אֶתְּהַלֵּךְ אֶ Dt 4₁₀, אֶתְּהַלֵּךְ אֶ כָּל־יְמֵי אֶתְּהַלֵּךְ אֶ Lv 13₄₆ אֶתְּהַלֵּךְ אֶ מִזְמַת אֶתְּהַלֵּךְ אֶ כָּל־יְמֵי אֶתְּהַלֵּךְ אֶ 2C 25₂₇, אֶתְּהַלֵּךְ אֶ בּוֹ, אֶתְּהַלֵּךְ אֶ לְאֶתְּהַלֵּךְ אֶ Lv 14₃₂.

B. אֶתְּהַלֵּךְ אֶ used as conjunction, cf. Gk. ὅτι and Lat. quod; אֶתְּהַלֵּךְ אֶ Jr 1₁₆ their wickedness, in which they left me = in that they left me, אֶתְּהַלֵּךְ אֶ לֹא אֶתְּהַלֵּךְ אֶ בְּרִית עוֹלָם אֶתְּהַלֵּךְ אֶ 32₄₀ an everlasting covenant, (stating) that I shall not turn away; therefore אֶתְּהַלֵּךְ אֶ בְּרִית עוֹלָם אֶתְּהַלֵּךְ אֶ becomes a conjunction, often instead of the older כִּי (Brockelmann *Heb. —2. when connecting three or more words ׀ may precede every word except the first: ׀ יִין וְקִיץ וְשָׁמֶן Jr 40₁₀; or it may precede only the last word: ׀ בְּמִקְנֶה בְּכֶסֶף וְבַזָּהָב Gn 13₂; in 2K 23₅ the third, fourth and fifth words are preceded by ׀ (׀ שָׁרְפָה Dt 29₂₂ is a summarizing apposition; ׀ קִצְיֵעוֹת Ps 45₉ is a gloss; Is 1₁₃ dl. ׀ קָרָא מִקְרָא; Jb 42₉ rd. ׀ וְצַפֵּר);

—3. emphasizing ׀ also, even: ׀ וְבַמּוֹתָם even in 2S 1₂₃, ׀ וְעַל־אֶרְבָּעָה even for Am 1₃;

—4. inclusive ׀ together with (in DSS this ׀ comes close to ׀ עַם, cf. Akk. adi, AHW. sv. 3b): ׀ וְצִאֲצָאִיהָ Is 42₅, ׀ וּמִצְוֹת Ex 12₈, ׀ וּלְדִרְיָה Ex 21₄; ׀ וְכָל 1C 21_{10b} (Rudolph);

—7. ׀ before a repeated noun expresses disparity (Brockelmann Heb. Syn. → 123d): ׀ אֶבֶן וְאֶבֶן double standard weights Pr 20₁₀, ׀ לֵב וְלֵב duplicitous heart Ps 12₃, ׀ עִיר וְעִיר every town Ezr 10₁₄;

—8. following a word or phrase preceded by ׀ even so; ׀ וְשִׂמוּעָה טוֹבָה even so is good news Pr 25₂₅;

- 9. וְ ... וְ as well as, both ... and Nu 9₁₄ Jr 13₁₄; Gn 36₂₄ rd. אִיהָ; Ps 76₇ rd. נִרְדְּמוּ רָכֵב;
- 10. וְ connects two or more clauses: וְהוּא גַר (הוּא resumes the subject) Ju 19₁₆;
- 11. the (circumstantial) clause beginning with וְ (GK §156a) represents a relative clause: וְהֵם and these were, i.e. who were Gn 14₁₃, וְשָׂמָּה and her name, i.e. whose name 16₁ (“oral” style parataxis for hypotaxis);
- 12. in older Hebrew a second clause beginning with וְ adds adverbial phrases, supplementary explanations and simil.: וְנִעַל and at the same time locking (the door) Ju 3₂₃ וְשִׁבְתִּי moreover I am grey-headed 1S 12₂;
- 13. a series of imperatives and jussives is frequently connected by וְ: הוֹאֵל־נָא וְלִין וְיִטֵּב Ju 19₆, וְאַנְקַמָּה ... אֲנַחֵם Is 1₂₄;
- 14. comparisons and parallelisms are similarly connected Jb 5₇ 12₁₁ 14₁₂;
- 15. so also contrasting clauses where וְ means but: וְאַת־בְּרִיתִי but my covenant Gn 17₂₁ Ps 13₆;
- 16. a series of alternative clauses may be linked with וְ or: וּמָכְרוּ Ex 21₁₆, וְהִתְעַמְרוּ־בוֹ Dt 24₇;
- 17. circumstantial and adverbial clauses may be introduced by וְ: וְהִיא יוֹשֶׁבֶת as she sat Ju 13₉;
- 18. וְ resumes the subject of a circumstantial clause at the beginning of the following main clause: שָׁלְחָה וְהִיא and then she sent Gn 38₂₅, וְהָמָּה מִצְאוּ and then they met 1S 9₁₁, וְהָאֲנָשִׁים the men were then (sent away) Gn 44₃;
- 19. in such clauses introductory וְ may often be translated by a conjunction other than “and”: וְלִבְךָ although Ju 16₁₅, therefore Gn 15₂ Is 53₇, וְשׂוֹן because Ps 60₁₃ etc.;
- 20. וְ may introduce a protestation (Arb. Pedersen Eid 16): וְאַתֶּם עֲרִי Is 43₁₂ 44₈; וְאִיהָ 51₁₃;
- 21. after an order, a question or a negation וְ with a jussive or a volutative expresses subordination and is best translated by a subordinating conjunction (GK §107 q, u, w): וְאַדְעָה (in order that) I may know Gn 42₃₄, Ex 9₁ Ju 19₆ Is 13₂; וְיִכְיֶזֶב that he should lie Nu 23₁₉, Is 40₂₅ Ho 14₁₀;
- 22. so also when וְ with imperative follows an imperative or jussive (GK §110f): וְהָיָה so that you will be Gn 12₂, וְחָיִי that you may live Gn 42₁₈;
- 23. וְ may introduce the second part of a conditional clause (GK §112ff-mm): וְיִלְדֵי then Gn 31₈, וְשָׁחַת, 38₉, וְנִכְרְתָה thus Ex 12₁₅ 1K 13₃₁ 14₁₂; so also when the condition is expressed by a casus pendens (GK §143c; Brockelmann Heb. Syn. §123): Gn 17₁₄ Is 9₄ Jb 36₂₆; Gn 49₂₅ rd. וְאֵל שְׂרֵי and אֵל אֲבִיךָ;

—24. pleonastic וְ (Ug. UT §13:103; Pope JAOS 73:95ff; Wernberg-M. JSS 3:321ff) וְהִנֵּה Gn 49₆ (→ הִנֵּה 6) וַיִּצְרְתֶיהָ Is 37₂₆ (1QIs^a without וְ), preceding the predicate Jb 36_{26b}; Brockelmann Heb. Syn. §123f;

—25. after an indication of time וְ introduces the verb (→ 27, 28); בַּיּוֹם הַשְּׁלִישִׁי וַיִּשָּׂא Gn 22₄ on the third day he lifted (his eyes), עָרַב וַיִּדְעֶתֶם at evening you shall know Ex 16₆;

—26. וְ may introduce a consequence or question (oral style): וְהָשִׁיבוּ so turn! Ezk 18₃₂; thus 2S 24₃ 2K 4₄₁ Zech 2₁₀, וַאֲיֹ and where is he? Ex 2₂₀, Gn 29₂₅ 1K 2₂₂;

—27. in impf. consecutive (GK §111; Bergsträsser 2:§8; Brockelmann Heb. Syn. §42c; Beer-M. §100:3) וְ like וְ (vs.) expresses the continuation of the action in narratives: וַיִּחַלֵּם ... וַיֵּלֶךְ שָׁם Gn 28₁₁, frequently it means and then (: וְאִ!); also after indications of time (→ 25); as a fossilized “narrative” form it may be found at the beginning of a book (Ezk, Ru, Est) and also express a conclusion, וַתְּסִיתַנִּי so that you (alt. adversative, although you) incited me Jb 2₃;

—28. in perfect consecutive (GK §112; Bergsträsser 2:§9; Brockelmann Heb. Syn. §41f) וְ with pf. following an impf., an impv., a jussive or a cohortative expresses a future (→ 23, 25): following an impf. וְלִקְחֶתִים וַיִּפְגַּע בְּמִקּוֹם וַיֵּלֶךְ שָׁם I will track them down and take them Am 9₃; following an impv. לֵךְ וְאָמַרְתָּ go and tell 2S 7₅; simil. after expressions of time → 25;
